SEMBACH KASERNE, Germany — Forest and farmland surround this small American military base, which is home to some of the least popular temporary accommodations in southwest Germany.
For nearly a decade, U.S. service members accused or convicted of crimes in Europe and Africa have been brought to a jail that many Germans and Americans living in the area know little about.

“Some people on Sembach don’t even know we’re here,” said Army chaplain Capt. Jeremi Wodecki, who has worked at U.S. Army Regional Correction Facility-Europe for almost two years. “But we’re a very busy facility and we make a huge impact across the armed forces.”

Droning on: Navy testing unmanned boats, aircraft

MANAMA, Bahrain — Unmanned boats with onboard aerial drones ready to launch sailed through the waters off Bahrain on Thursday, carrying with them the Navy’s vision of a 100-vessel unmanned surface fleet in the Middle East by the end of next summer.
A three-week training event dubbed Digital Horizon, which started last week, features 15 types of unmanned systems, 10 of which are new to the Navy in the region, service officials said.
“This is a notable influx of new systems that 5th Fleet hasn’t worked with before, especially at one time,” Cmdr. Timothy Hawkins, Naval Forces Central Command and 5th Fleet spokesman, said Thursday. “This event, we haven’t done something like this yet, but we’ve been building up to it.”

The Navy aims to rely more on unmanned vessels aided by artificial intelligence to help patrol Middle East waterways through which much of the world’s trade transits.
A naval unit known as Task Force 59 was created last year to focus on integrating drones and AI into 5th Fleet operations. Unmanned systems can operate for long stretches on their own as they gather information.
As boats with observers approached the drones out at sea Wednesday, the vessels’ artificial intelligence alerted contractors and sailors at Task Force 59’s robotics operations center at NSA Bahrain.

White House approves $1B weapons sale to Qatar during key World Cup match with Iran

Associated Press
WASHINGTON — The Biden administration on Tuesday approved a $1 billion arms sale to Qatar in a transaction unveiled during halftime of the key World Cup 2022 match in Doha between Iran and the United States.
The State Department announced it had signed off on Qatar's purchase of 10 defensive drone systems, 200 interceptors and related equipment just as the second half of the U.S.-Iran game began. Qatar, along with other Gulf Arab states, faces threats from Iranian-backed proxies in the region.

The department said in a statement the sale would "support the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by helping to improve the security of a friendly country that continues to be an important force for political stability and economic progress in the Middle East."

It will "improve Qatar's capability to meet current and future threats by providing electronic and kinetic defeat capabilities against Unmanned Aircraft Systems. Qatar will have no difficulty absorbing these articles and/or services into its armed forces," the department said.

Fighter damaged following Okinawa landing

By MATTHEW M. BURKE
AND KEISHI KOJA
Stars and Stripes

CAMP FOSTER, Okinawa — A Marine Corps stealth fighter was damaged Thursday following a precautionary landing at an Okinawa air base, a Marine official said Thursday evening.

A suspected electrical problem prompted the pilot to land the F-35B Lightning II, assigned to VMFA-121 at Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni, Japan, at Kadena Air Base without incident at approximately 1:40 p.m., 1st Marine Aircraft Wing spokesman Maj. Rob Martins wrote in a statement to Stars and Stripes.

Kadena Air Base is home to the Air Force's 18th Wing.

While the fifth-generation fighter was being towed on the flight line, the front landing gear malfunctioned and the aircraft's nose dropped onto the ground, Martins said. He said the incident caused no injuries. Video from Japanese public broadcaster NHK shared Thursday on Twitter showed the F-35 stopped on a taxiway with its nose gear collapsed.

"The pilot performed as trained and chose the safest option, landing the aircraft safely in accordance with standard procedures," Martins said in the statement. "Operating our aircraft safely and effectively is a top priority and our aviators take great precautions to ensure the safety of the aircrew and the surrounding areas."

The fighter was conducting "standard training operations" in local ranges at the time of the incident, Martins said in a follow-up email to Stars and Stripes. After the aircraft landed, it was surrounded by fire engines and emergency vehicles, NHK reported Thursday afternoon.

It is unclear how much damage was done to the fighter, Martins said in his email. He said a "detailed investigation" will be conducted.

"The mishap class will be determined by the investigation," Martins wrote in the email.

The military defines mishaps by class from A to D. Class A mishaps involve repair costs exceeding $2 million or the death or permanent disability of a service member. A Class D mishap involves $25,000 to $59,999 in property damage and injuries ranging requiring first aid up to missing a day from work.

The Marine Corps has had three Class A mishaps in manned aircraft in 2022, according to data on the Naval Safety Command's website.

A spokesman for the Okinawa Defense Bureau, a branch of the Japanese Ministry of Defense, said Thursday evening it is aware "the nose of an F35 touched the ground" but is awaiting details.

A spokesman for Okinawa prefecture's Military Base Affairs Division said it was waiting for information from the defense bureau. Gov. Denny Tamaki had not yet made a public comment on the incident.

The short-takeoff, vertical-landing fighter has been plagued by high costs and technical issues since its inception.

The pilot of an F-35A Lightning II, the Air Force variant, survived a crash at Hill Air Force Base, Utah on Oct. 19. A replacement F-35A costs about $75 million, Reuters reported in July.

2 Navy ships nearly collide in waters of San Diego Bay

By DOUG G. WARE
Stars and Stripes

The Navy has initiated an investigation of a near collision between two ships that occurred in the waters off San Diego, service officials said Wednesday.

The USS Momsen and USS Harpers Ferry were moving in opposite directions in San Diego Bay on Tuesday when they came close to colliding, officials said.

The vessels were able to maneuver past each other safely and neither ship was damaged, a Navy spokesperson said.

No related injuries were reported.

"The incident is under investigation," a spokesperson for the 3rd Fleet said.

A webcam in the bay captured the near miss and the video was posted online.

The USS Momsen is an Arleigh Burke-class, guided-missile destroyer based in San Diego that entered service in 2003, while the USS Harpers Ferry is a dock-landing ship based near Seattle that's been in service with the Navy since the mid-1990s.

Dock landing ships are used to transport landing crafts and amphibious vehicles.

The near miss was the second incident on Tuesday involving a San Diego-based Navy ship.

A fire broke out and injured nine sailors aboard the USS Abraham Lincoln as the aircraft carrier performed routine operations off the Southern California coast.

The Navy said none of those injuries were serious and the fire is under investigation.

Federal judge tosses veteran's lawsuit blaming antimalarial drug for psychosis

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A federal judge threw out a lawsuit against the maker of an anti-malarial drug blamed for causing psychotic behavior and neurological damage to U.S. servicemembers, ruling that the case had no right to be filed in California.

The proposed class-action case brought last year by an Army veteran accused Roche Laboratories Inc. and Genentech Inc. of intentionally misleading the Department of Defense and the Food and Drug Administration about the dangers of mefloquine, the generic version of the drug Lariam.

Similar cases had been brought in Canada and Australia, but the lawsuit in federal court in Northern California was the first large-scale case of its kind in the U.S., attorneys said.

The U.S. military, which developed the drug during the Vietnam War, was once its largest user to combat malaria. It was given to hundreds of thousands of troops sent to Afghanistan and Somalia.

Roche, which was granted the intellectual property rights and won FDA approval for Lariam in 1989, said it manufactured its last lots for U.S. distribution in 2005. Those drugs expired in 2008 — a year before the company's 2009 merger with Genentech.

The Pentagon continued to distribute generic versions of the drug, though elite Army units were ordered to stop using mefloquine in 2013 after the FDA put a black box warning on it after it was found to cause permanent brain damage in rare cases. The warning said it caused side effects such as dizziness, loss of balance and ringing in the ears that could become permanent.

The Army has mainly replaced mefloquine with drugs found to be safer.

John Nelson of Florida brought the suit after he said he became permanently disabled from taking the drug during his Army service from 2005 to 2015. Nelson said he never experienced any neuropsychiatric symptoms until he began taking mefloquine just before being stationed in Afghanistan.

9 sailors injured after fire breaks out on USS Lincoln

By DOUG G. WARE
Stars and Stripes

Nine sailors were recovering from injuries on Wednesday after a fire broke out aboard a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier off the West Coast, Navy officials said.

The Nimitz-class USS Abraham Lincoln was performing "routine operations" on Tuesday roughly 30 miles off the Southern California coast when the blaze began, according to a statement from the Navy's 3rd Fleet. The Navy did not say precisely where the Lincoln was located off California at the time.

"The fire was quickly identified and extinguished through the crew's firefighting efforts," the 3rd Fleet said.

"Nine sailors aboard are reported to have suffered minor injuries and have been treated aboard the ship."

A spokesman for the 3rd Fleet said six of the injured sailors showed signs of dehydration.

Officials said the cause of the blaze is not yet known, but they noted it didn't force the Lincoln to return to port.

The sudden fire is the second safety-related incident to occur aboard the USS Abraham Lincoln in the last few weeks. In September, E. coli bacteria was found in several of the ship's potable water tanks, but the Navy said no sailors were sickened by it.

The Lincoln was built during the 1980s and commissioned in 1989. It's based at Naval Air Station North Island in San Diego.

Troops in Japan given longer curfew

By ALEX WILSON
Stars and Stripes

Liberty policies for U.S. service members in Japan ages 20 and older are about to become a little more generous, according to changes announced Thursday by U.S. Forces Japan.

New policies that take effect Monday will permit individual commands to shift their curfews from rank-based to age-based, USFJ spokesman Maj. Thomas Barger told Stars and Stripes by email Thursday. The standard 1 a.m. to 5 a.m. curfew in place since March 2020 that applies to enlisted service members of E-5 and below will apply instead to members ages 19 and younger, he said.

Eligible service members may have another drink in that extra hour. The changes move the deadline for consuming alcohol off-base from midnight to 1 a.m., according to Barger.

Service members in Japan are currently prohibited from consuming alcohol anywhere but their residence, hotel or other quarters between midnight and 5 a.m. The same conditions will apply under the 1 a.m. deadline.

The changes significantly relax restrictions on sailors ages 20 and older, but installation and unit commanders may impose more stringent restrictions “as deemed necessary in order to maintain good order, discipline and unit readiness,” Barger said.

“The current update is part of the order’s necessity and provisions therein to allow for more individuals to experience the local communities they work and live in while maintaining relevant liberty safeguards,” he wrote in the email.

The new policy accounts for the host nation’s cultural standards and a U.S. military force that has, on average, grown older, according to Barger. Service members ranked E-6 and lower are an average 25.6 years old, while E-4s and below are an average 22.6 years old, according to a 2021 Defense Department report.

“This update better serves our military personnel while recognizing a shift in demographics to older, more mature, junior enlisted members now serving in the U.S. military,” Barger said. “Japanese society traditionally recognizes those 20 years and older as adults, therefore bringing the USFJ policy in line with local culture and norms.”

A third change eliminates the requirement for a “liberty buddy” for some service members. Under that system, military personnel below E-5 were required to be accompanied on liberty by another approved individual, such as another service member or a family member, between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m.

The new policy does away with the buddy requirement entirely, a decision influenced by the military’s built-in culture of camaraderie, Barger said.

“A buddy/wingman concept is engrained in our military culture, therefore administratively mandating a nationwide policy was deemed not relevant nor necessary to maintain military readiness,” he wrote in the email. “We always have and will continue encouraging our personnel to look out for each other.”

Students prepare for the ASVAB Career Exploration Program aptitude test at Yokota High School, Tokyo.

Record number of students sit for career aptitude test at Yokota base

By JOSEPH DITZLER
Stars and Stripes

YOKOTA AIR BASE, Japan — A record 144 students at Yokota High School recently sat for a battery of tests to discover their career potential, according to the Defense Department school system in the Pacific.

The Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery Career Exploration Program identifies students’ skills and interests and provides them “an opportunity to explore career and post-secondary options as well as various college major and career field pathways,” according to a news release Wednesday from Miranda Ferguson, spokeswoman for Department of Defense Education Activity-Pacific.

Generations of service members are familiar with the ASVAB, a series of tests the military uses to match recruits with the jobs they’re best suited for. Similarly, the ASVAB Career Exploration Program, an aptitude test, provides students with possible matching careers, highlights their academic strengths and offers an “interest inventory,” along with career exploration tools that students can discuss with parents, according to the release.

The Career Exploration Program is a voluntary test sponsored by the Department of Defense, and although the results are available to military recruiters, students and their parents may opt out of that release, Ferguson said by email to Stars and Stripes on Thursday.

Last year, 116 students at Yokota High took the test battery, but this year another 28 signed on for a record number of test-takers at the school, she said.

“The school attributes this increase to sustained work promoting and explaining the ASVAB Career Exploration Program to multiple audiences, including faculty, students, and parents,” Ferguson said. “Faculty encouragement, student word-of-mouth and parent interest contributed to robust participation.”

Nearly three-quarters, or 72%, of eligible students in grades 10 to 12 took the test this year, according to the release.

“The test was offered on four separate days to ensure all interested students had the opportunity to participate,” Ferguson said Thursday.

Space Force to set up CENTCOM-focused component in Florida

By COREY DICKSTEIN
Stars and Stripes

The Space Force will establish its second geographically focused command on Friday when it activates U.S. Space Forces-Central at MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., military officials announced Wednesday.

The new command will report directly to U.S. Central Command leaders and take responsibility for space-based operations within Central Command’s area of responsibility, according to a CENTCOM statement. CENTCOM, also headquartered at MacDill, is responsible for military operations throughout the Middle East and central Asia, where the command has spent recent decades overseeing wars in Iraq, Afghanistan and Syria.

The new organization, which will be known as SPACECENT, will be responsible for ensuring satellite-based navigation and communications for troops in the CENTCOM region and conducting missile detection, among other things, according to CENTCOM. It will initially include about 28 Space Force guardians and be commanded by Col. Christopher Putman. A longtime, space-focused officer in the Space Force and Air Force, Putman has been serving recently as the director of Space Forces for U.S. Air Forces-Central, which is also headquartered at MacDill.

“Just as the evolution of space as a warfighting domain necessitated the establishment of a separate service, SPACECENT provides CENTCOM a subordinate command focused solely and continuously on space integration across the command — with all domains and all components,” Putman said in the statement.

SPACECENT’s activation comes just days after the establishment of U.S. Space Forces Indo-Pacific on Tuesday at Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam in Hawaii. That command was the first geographic-focused Space Force component established. The Pentagon’s newest military service established its first component command in October 2020, which provided Space Force troops to U.S. Space Command.

Pentagon officials said the Space Force is expected to establish additional geographic component commands in the future, including a component assigned to U.S. European Command. It was not clear Wednesday when those additional Space Force elements would be established.

The Space Force was initially established in 2019 as a separate military service within the Department of the Air Force. By far the smallest of the military services, the Space Force is charged with providing troops trained to ensure the safety and operation of U.S. space-based assets such as satellites and conduct other space-based missions such as early warnings of incoming missiles.

CENTCOM said Wednesday that the new Space Force element would enhance its “ability to promote security and regional stability, while also advancing U.S. partnerships in the region throughout the space domain.”

War, pandemic delay US pledge to arm Taiwan

By SETH ROBSON
Stars and Stripes

The war in Ukraine is holding up already backlogged U.S. efforts to arm Taiwan, according to a recent U.S. government report.

Delays in delivery of weapons such as F-16 fighter jets, Stinger air-defense missiles and Paladin self-propelled howitzer artillery to Taiwan were noted in the November report to Congress by the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission.

"The diversion of existing stocks of weapons and munitions to Ukraine and pandemic-related supply-chain issues have exacerbated a sizable backlog in the delivery of weapons already approved for sale to Taiwan, undermining the island's readiness," the commission said in its report.

More than 400 individual sales of U.S. equipment or technical assistance to Taiwan were pending, according to testimony by Deputy Secretary of State Wendy Sherman to the House Foreign Affairs Committee in April. Sherman's remarks do not specify whether those sales happened within the past few years, according to the November report.

The backlog of weapons deliveries was over $14 billion in December 2021 and is now $18.7 billion, according to congressional officials and others familiar with the matter cited in a Wall Street Journal report Sunday.

The prospect of a naval blockade by China means getting weapons to Taiwan during any future conflict would be far more challenging than sending arms to Ukraine.

National Security Council spokesman John Kirby, in a press briefing Monday, declined to comment on the backlog.

"I'm not going to get into it at a public podium ... talking about inventory stocks of any system anywhere," he said Thursday, according to a transcript of the briefing provided by the State Department. "That just is not a good idea for — for us to do."

The U.S. is constantly balancing its own weapons inventories, those of allies and partners and people who purchase arms as well as the Ukrainian armed forces, Kirby said.

"And it's a balancing act," he said. "And we're in constant touch with, again, allies and partners about their readiness needs, because many of them are reliant on U.S. systems. And, of course, you know, that includes Taiwan."

President Joe Biden recently approved another billion dollars in arms sales to Taiwan, Kirby said.

"And, of course, we're going to continue to look at what the next iteration of that needs to look like and when that would occur," he said. "But we take very seriously our responsibility to help provide Taiwan the self-defense capabilities that it needs."

The U.S. arms sales to Taiwan are in accordance with law and policy and that isn't going to change, Kirby said.

"Taiwan would like to request that the weapons the U.S. sells to Taiwan be delivered as scheduled," Gen. Wang Shin-lung, the vice minister for armaments at Taiwan's Ministry of National Defense, said last month, according to the Wall Street Journal report.

Taiwan and the U.S. are both concerned about possible delays in weapons deliveries, according to Norah Huang, director for international relations at the Prospect Foundation, a security and foreign affairs think tank in Taipei.

The U.S. and Taiwan have been in discussions about joint manufacturing of weapons, she said in an email Wednesday.

"Weapons like stingers and javelins are in shortage already because of the war in Ukraine," she said. "My sense is, joint manufacturing would be part of the U.S. burden sharing with its [allies] and partners."

The slow weapons deliveries are an issue for Taiwan, especially as it faces mounting pressure from China, agreed Ian Chong, an associate professor of political science at the National University of Singapore.

"They've historically faced difficulties in getting arms due to [Chinese] pressure," he said in an email Tuesday. "Cognizance of this challenge is also why Taiwan has always had a domestic arms industry with some pockets of advanced research and development."

Local arms development has received a boost under Taiwan President Tsai Ing-wen's administration to address the uncertainties relating to foreign arms supplies, Chong said.

"Ships, submarines, aircraft, and missiles are particular areas of focus, although there is some effort to develop land systems like armored vehicles as well," he said.

Toxic firefighting foam spill seen as setback to facility closure

By WYATT OLSON
Stars and Stripes

JOINT BASE PEARL HARBOR-HICKAM, Hawaii — The hundreds of gallons of toxic firefighting foam spilled Tuesday in the Red Hill fuel storage facility in Hawaii is a "setback" in draining its tanks, the rear admiral in charge of that job said Wednesday.

About 1,100 gallons of Aqueous Film Forming Foam, or AFFF, was released from a tank near the top level of the vast underground facility.

Workers toiled through the night digging up soil contaminated with the foam, which contains PFAS, or perfluoroalkyl and polyfluoroalkyl, a class of hazardous chemicals commonly used in manufacturing and fire suppressants.

The Navy is in the midst of a two-year project to drain roughly 104 million gallons of fuel from the tanks before the facility is permanently closed. One year ago, a fuel leak from the facility contaminated drinking water for thousands of residents on and near Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam.

"This is a setback, but the bigger picture here is that we've got to remove this fuel from the tanks above our aquifer," Rear Adm. John Wade told reporters during a news conference Wednesday at the joint base.

Up to 50 workers at a time labored through the night to remove soil soaked with AFFF, as well as tearing up asphalt and concrete that may have absorbed the foam, Rear Adm. Stephen Barnett, commander of Navy Region Hawaii, said at the news conference.

About 250 cubic feet of soil was put into 131 drums and removed as of Wednesday afternoon, Barnett said.

The Hawaii Department of Health said in a news release Wednesday that it had notified the Navy it would require the service to test for PFAS in the soil and groundwater. It is also requiring the Navy to contact the manufacturer of the foam to identify specific PFAS components in the AFFF.

"There continues to be no evidence of impact to surface water or drinking water," the Health Department said.

Ernest Lau, manager and chief engineer at Oahu's Board of Water Supply, expressed exasperation with the Navy during a news conference Wednesday, at one point struggling to hold back tears.

"I'm not asking anymore; I'm demanding," Lau said. "We have a right to know what's stored there and being used there in addition to the 104 million gallons of petroleum. We want to know what kind of chemicals are being stored there and being used on that facility that could be a risk to the environment."

The cause of the spill is still under investigation. The facility had only one holding tank for the AFFF, which is now empty, Wade said.

Left with diminished capacity to suppress a fire, the facility has stationed a firetruck onsite round-the-clock, he added.

All maintenance in the facility is now on hold as a result, he said.

Jail: Facility used by Africa, Europe theaters

and Marine Corps and is the only military jail for the Europe and African theaters. It's where U.S. service members stationed as far away as Italy, Turkey and Djibouti are taken to be confined.

Stars and Stripes was recently granted access to the site to observe daily operations.

A dozen inmates were being held at the time of the late November visit, about a third of the jail's capacity. While the number may seem small, officials say it's deceiving because of the high occupant turnover.

One of the jail's primary functions is to hold inmates en route to larger, branch-specific prisons in the United States. Those not bound for the U.S. are awaiting courts-martial or serving sentences of less than a year.

While most inmates are active-duty service members, Defense Department civilian employees also can be detained at the facility under certain circumstances.

The short stays mean more people arrive and get released at any hour of any day, including weekends and holidays, and that guards always must be prepared.

"It really is a 24-hour-a-day, 7-day-a-week service we provide," said Army Master Sgt. Marcus Mitchell, who supervises the guards.

Upon arrival, inmates are reminded that military rules and discipline are enforced and that staff members are to be addressed by their rank.

Staffers, meanwhile, must learn to engage with inmates of all seniority levels equally.

"Everyone is treated the same once they come through these doors: as a prisoner," Mitchell said. "As far as their rank, they kind of lose it because they are here, and they are confined."

A central control room allows guards to observe all areas holding inmates.

Three communal bays with bunkbeds house most occupants.

A row of individual cells — each a few yards long and only about an arm's length wide, equipped with a bed, toilet and sink — is where those who are segregated for disruptive behavior at the facility are kept.

Cameras monitoring the cells are programmed with blacked out areas that cover inmates' private parts when they use the toilet. This feature, which didn't exist a few years ago, is pretty much the only privacy afforded to the inmates.

Staffers say the cameras are vital to detecting self-harm and unruly behavior.

When things get out of hand with an inmate, a procedure known as a forced cell extraction may be required.

Five guards remove the inmate from his cell, search him and return him when the go-ahead is given. This has happened a few times in recent months, staffers said.

However, most inmates behave well and focus on rehabilitation, which includes counseling, services for substance abuse and vocational activities, they added. Stars and Stripes was prohibited from speaking with any inmates while at the facility.

Wodecki, the chaplain who specializes in teaching inmates how to cope with stress, said he's had to provide just as much support to guards, who often work 12-hour shifts in groups of six or seven.

"Here, you have to serve two groups of people," Wodecki said. "It's a tough job for the guards. They are far away from home. Many of them are single and have to work long hours, even on the weekends. It's stressful for them."

Watch commander Sgt. James Stanphill, who's been at the jail for nearly two years after stints at Guantanamo Bay and the U.S. Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., agrees that the work can be difficult but said he's experienced what he calls "squad integrity" since assuming the role.

The facility recently received the Brig. Gen. Thomas F. Barr Award, which recognizes the best detachment-sized correctional unit with U.S. Army Corrections Command.

"Through our work, we have proven that you don't have to be the biggest unit to be the best," Stanphill said.

The Sembach jail is a level-one correction facility, the lowest level of security in the military's three-tier system. The Defense Department has one other level-one facility abroad, in South Korea.

In addition to the guards, a few dozen other troops make up the jail's small, multi-branch staff. Among the other staff members are medics, behavioral health specialists and non-Army liaisons, who focus on transporting their

Since it opened in 2014, no one has tried to break out of the facility.

But the fact that inmates are routinely transported to and from the jail increases the chance of an escape attempt, said facility commander Army Maj. Randall Zamora.

"That's the one thing that keeps me up at night," Zamora said.

And finding an escapee off base could be challenging because there is minimal cooperation between the jail and German authorities, he said.

But both sides have made overtures to change that, with the goal of conducting a full-scale exercise with jail staff and German police sometime next year.

"It's important we establish these relationships and are able to build on them because this is a real-world operation," Zamora said. "We have to try to expect the unexpected."

NORAD begins annual mission to track Santa

By PHILLIP WALTER
WELLMAN
Stars and Stripes

A military command that protects North America from potential air and sea threats has begun its annual side mission of preparing to track Santa Claus' journey around the world on Christmas Eve.

On Thursday, the North American Aerospace Defense Command at Peterson Space Force Base in Colorado Springs, Colo., reactivated its Santa-tracking website, which will provide live updates on his whereabouts on Dec. 24.

Until then, visitors to Noradsanta.org in English and seven other languages can access a countdown to Christmas, festive movies and stories, a Christmas song playlist and a new holiday-themed game each day.

The efforts continue a nearly seven-decade tradition by the joint U.S.-Canadian command, which constantly monitors air traffic over the continent.

"For the holiday season, we just add one extra mission that falls in line with our daily operations," spokeswoman Capt. Alexandra Hejduk of the Canadian armed forces told Stars and Stripes. "It's a mission of holiday cheer."

NORAD's predecessor, the Continental Air Defense Command, or CONAD, began tracking Santa's Christmas journey by coincidence in 1955, when an advertisement by Sears Roebuck in Colorado Springs misprinted a telephone number for children to call Santa. The published number was the CONAD commander-in-chief's operations hotline.

Recognizing the mistake, the director of operations at the time,

Col. Harry Shoup, instructed his staff to tell young callers that radar was being monitored for indications of Santa traveling from the North Pole.

CONAD personnel provided live updates on his location, and thus the tradition was born.

NORAD Tracks Santa has since grown to reach millions each year. The website alone gets about 14 million views per season, according to figures provided by the command.

Its Santa-tracking app is also available on Android and iOS devices, and the mission has several social media accounts on platforms like Facebook and YouTube.

Sticklers for tradition can still phone in for updates from anywhere in the world at 877-HI-NORAD (877-446-6723). And you never know who might pick up. Former first lady Michelle Obama answered calls when she participated from 2009 to 2016.

More than 1,500 Canadian and American uniformed personnel, Defense Department civilian employees and others help each season, according to the command.

Volunteers and donations from companies cover virtually all of the costs of running the program, which shows no signs of slowing down, Hejduk said.

"It's a tradition the NORAD team is proud to continue each year," Hejduk said. "As long as there are children asking, 'Where is Santa?' NORAD will be there each holiday season to keep them informed."

identify objects in the water and spot suspicious behavior. This capability allows humans to focus on priority threats, Navy Capt. Michael Brasseur, commodore of Task Force 59, said Thursday.

"What we want to do ultimately is expand further how far we can see," Brasseur said. "And we want to leverage machine learning and AI to reduce the cognitive load on the watch-standers."

Over the past year, Task Force 59 operated unmanned surface ships in the Middle East for more than 25,000 hours, a Naval Forces Central Command statement last week said.

Some of the vessels known as Saildrone Explorers have operated at sea for as long as 220 consecutive days, the NAVCENT statement said.

Iran seized those drones on separate occasions in August and September.

In both instances, Iranian sailors released them as U.S. war-

The Digital Horizon exercise includes three aerial drones that will be tested in the Middle East for the first time.

Aerovel's Flexrotor and Shield AI's V-BAT each have vertical takeoff and landing systems. The other is tethered on a cable and can operate in harsh environments, a Navy statement said.

One aquatic drone being tested, the Ocean Aero Triton, can operate for eight days at a time as a submarine and three months as a surface vessel.

The Triton's sail rotated up and down Thursday as the company representative demonstrated how the drone can go underwater within minutes if it detects a threat.

The 10 new drone systems in the exercise were selected from 100 companies that applied, Navy officials said.

Of the 100 unmanned surface vessels the task force wants sailing around the Middle East by next summer, the U.S. will contribute 20, while regional allies will contribute the rest, Navy officials said.

Ukraine aims to stop Russia regrouping

BY LAURA KING
AND TRACY WILKINSON
Los Angeles Times

MYKOLAIV, Ukraine — On the desolate battlefronts of southern and eastern Ukraine, the clinging, claylike mud of late autumn is beginning to congeal into iciness. As snow flurries and freezing temperatures set in, the last thing this country's leaders want is for the war's front lines to harden in place as well.

Any wintertime letup in combat operations, Ukrainian officials believe, would give Russia's beleaguered army a chance to rest, regroup and try to seize momentum that has eluded Moscow's forces throughout more than nine months of fighting. So even during the coming cold months, Ukraine is determined to keep up military pressure on a numerically superior but faltering foe.

But Russia is employing a pressure tactic of its own: deliberate destruction of Ukraine's energy infrastructure, with civilian morale as an indirect target. Waves of bombardment that began in earnest in early October, aimed at targets such as thermal plants and electrical substations, have brought the national power grid to the brink of collapse just as temperatures are plummeting.

Ukrainian officials and Western allies have taken to calling it the weaponization of winter.

"This war has knocked on the door of each and every Ukrainian home," Iryna Maruniak, who oversees utility issues for the municipality of Lviv, western Ukraine's biggest city, said last week, citing power cuts that have left millions of households across the country dark and cold.

Ukraine expects the punishing onslaught to continue.

"As long as they have missiles, they won't stop, unfortunately," Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy said in a video address this week.

Acknowledging what has become the dual-front nature of the war — the military's need for sophisticated armaments, both offensive and defensive, and the burgeoning needs of an electricity-starved populace — Ukraine's defense minister, Dmytro Kuleba, succinctly summed up his country's wish list.

"Patriots and transformers," he told reporters on the sidelines of this week's North Atlantic Treaty Organization summit in Romania, referring to sophisticated missile-defense systems and devices that transfer energy from one electrical circuit to another, which are in short supply as urgent power-grid repairs continue around the clock.

U.S. and NATO officials this week seemed to be addressing that wish list. As a supplement to the nearly $40 billion in weapons and military equipment the West is shipping to Ukraine, the U.S. announced a $53-million package of "energy aid," including the crucial transformers as well as generators and spare parts for electrical systems.

In Washington, a senior Defense Department official said the Pentagon is considering adding long-range Patriot surface-to-air missile systems to a future package of military aid to Ukraine.

Despite harsh weather conditions in the field, or perhaps because of them, Western analysts and officials believe Ukrainian commanders will keep pushing during the cold-weather months to recapture more territory controlled by Russia.

Ukraine wants to build on military successes that came both early and recent. In April, its forces repelled Russia's attempt to seize the capital, Kyiv. In September, Ukrainian forces retook thousands of square miles in the northeastern province of Kharkiv. Last month, Russian troops, cut off from their own supply lines, were forced to abandon the strategic city of Kherson, the only provincial capital they had managed to capture since February.

Better-equipped and more disciplined Ukrainian forces will probably stand up well against ill-trained, poorly supplied Russian troops who quickly found themselves thrust onto the front lines after being mobilized, Western military assessments suggest.

In a winter preview, British military intelligence said last month that "changes to daylight hours, temperature, and weather will present unique challenges" for both sides. The assessment said, though, that NATO-standard cold-weather gear provided to Ukrainian forces would help protect against hypothermia.

Autumn rain, and resulting thick mud, has slowed the pace of battle, but freezing ground later in winter will again allow freer movement of heavy equipment — one reason Putin waited until February to invade.

But the forecast is brutal in places such as Bakhmut, an eastern city that has been a vortex of carnage unleashed by Russian forces, including mercenaries from the notorious private Wagner group. The devastated landscape, riddled with tree stumps and water-filled shell holes, hauntingly evokes scenes of trench warfare in World War I.

In the south, the Black Sea coast may now be a crucial springboard for Ukrainian forces. For months, Ukraine successfully defended the city of Mykolaiv, though deadly, near-constant missile attacks ravaged parts of it.

The city of Kherson, now freed from an eight-month Russian occupation, has been under fierce Russian shelling from across the Dnieper River, where Moscow's forces have been fortifying their defenses in anticipation of a renewed Ukrainian push.

For Ukraine, even victories are clouded by suffering. Last month, authorities began evacuating civilians from recently recaptured areas of Kherson and Mykolaiv provinces, foreseeing that winter conditions will simply be too difficult due to lack of heat, power and water.

Neither side gives a public accounting of its dead and wounded, although Western estimates suggest casualties on both sides number in the many tens of thousands. Ukraine's military said that, by its reckoning, 500 Russian soldiers were killed in one 24-hour period this week.

And every day across the country, intimate scenes of grief dot the conflict's vast canvas.

In a war in which not only the young but the middle-aged go off to fight, Yuriy Chernenko — killed on the eastern front two days before what would have been his 54th birthday — was mourned by classmates in Lviv, who remembered their kindergarten days together nearly half a century earlier.

"He was so happy to be a grandfather; it brought him such joy," said Iryna Krupchak, 53, who joined the solemn procession behind Chernenko's coffin. "I curse those who stole his life from him."

Russian shelling cuts off power again in liberated Kherson

Associated Press

KHERSON, Ukraine — Russian shelling cut off power in much of the recently liberated Ukrainian city of Kherson on Thursday, just days after it was restored amid Moscow's ongoing drive to destroy key civilian infrastructure as freezing weather sets in.

In Kyiv, Mayor Vitali Klitschko warned the capital's millions of residents that they should stock up on water and preserved food to see them through a winter that could prove miserable if more energy infrastructure is damaged.

He also urged people to consider leaving the city to stay with friends or family elsewhere, if possible.

"Trying months lie ahead. The enemy still possesses substantial resources," Ukrainian Defense Minister Oleksiy Reznikov said. He added, however, that "signs are accumulating that (Russia) needs a pause at all costs."

Ukraine has faced a blistering onslaught of Russian artillery fire and drone attacks since early October.

The shelling has been especially intense in Kherson since Russian forces withdrew and Ukraine's army reclaimed the southern city almost three weeks ago.

Ukraine's presidential office said Thursday that at least two civilians were killed and six others wounded nationwide by the latest Russian shelling. In Kherson, a 70-year-old woman was killed in her apartment and a 64-year-old man was wounded on the street. A 15-year-old boy died when a hospital in the northeastern Sumy region town of Bilopillia was hit, the presidential office said.

Local authorities said about two-thirds of Kherson had electricity as of Thursday night. Some residents congregated at the train station or at government-supported tents that provided heating, food, drinks and electricity to charge cellphones.

In the eastern Dnipropetrovsk region, Russian forces fired "from evening till morning" at Ukrainian-held towns facing the Russian occupied Zaporizhzhia Nuclear Power Plant across the Dnieper River, the regional governor said Thursday.

Elsewhere in eastern Ukraine, Russian forces continued their attempts to encircle the Donetsk region city of Bakhmut, focusing on several villages around it and trying to cut a key highway.

Biden, Macron discuss climate, Ukraine, China

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Presidents Joe Biden and Emmanuel Macron sat down Thursday for the centerpiece talks of a pomp-filled French state visit, with the two leaders eager to talk through the war in Ukraine, concerns about China’s increasing assertiveness in the Indo-Pacific and European dismay over aspects of Biden’s signature climate law.

Biden was to honor Macron with the first state dinner of his presidency on Thursday evening, but first the two leaders met in the Oval Office to discuss difficult issues that they face.

At the top of the agenda is the 9-month-old war in Ukraine in which Biden and Macron face headwinds as they try to maintain unity in the U.S. and Europe to keep economic and military aid flowing to Kyiv as it tries to repel Russian forces.

“The choices we make today and the years ahead will determine the course of our world for decades to come,” Biden said at an arrival ceremony.

Macron at the start of the face-to-face meeting acknowledged the “challenging times” in Ukraine and called on the two nations to better “synchronize our actions” on climate.

In Washington, Republicans are set to take control of the House, where GOP leader Kevin McCarthy has said his party’s lawmakers will not write a “blank check” for Ukraine. Across the Atlantic, Macron’s efforts to keep Europe united will be tested by the mounting costs of supporting Ukraine in the war and as Europe battles rising energy prices that threaten to derail the post-pandemic economic recovery.

Macron at the arrival ceremony stressed a need for the U.S. and France to keep the West united as the war continues.

“Our two nations are sisters in the fight for freedom,” Macron declared.

Amid the talk of maintaining unity, differences on trade were shadowing the visit.

Macron has made clear that he and other European leaders are concerned about the incentives in a climate-related law that favor American-made climate technology, including electric vehicles.

He criticized the legislation, known as the Inflation Reduction Act, during a luncheon Wednesday with U.S. lawmakers and again during a speech at the French Embassy. Macron said that while the Biden administration’s efforts to curb climate change should be applauded, the subsidies would be an enormous setback for European companies.

“The choices that have been made ... are choices that will fragment the West,” Macron said. He said the legislation “creates such differences between the United States of America and Europe that all those who work in many companies (in the U.S.), they will just think, ‘We don’t make investments any more on the other side of the Atlantic.’”

The European Union has also expressed concern that tax credits, including those aimed at encouraging Americans to buy electric vehicles, would discriminate against European producers and break World Trade Organization rules.

Macron also raised eyebrows earlier this month in a speech at a summit in Bangkok when he referred to the U.S. and China as “two big elephants” that are at the cusp of creating “a big problem for the rest of jungle.” His visit to Washington also comes as both the U.S. and France are keeping an eye on China after protests broke out last weekend in several mainland cities and Hong Kong over Beijing’s “zero COVID” strategy.

Inflation gauge slows down but still high at 6%

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A measure of inflation that is closely monitored by the Federal Reserve eased but remained at an elevated level in October, likely reinforcing the Fed’s intent to keep raising interest rates to cool the economy and slow the rise of prices.

Thursday’s report from the Commerce Department showed that prices rose 6% in October from a year earlier. That was down from 6.3% year-over-year increase in September. Excluding volatile food and energy prices, so-called core inflation over the previous 12 months was 5%, less than the 5.2% annual increase in September.

Responding to the worst inflation bout since the early 1980s, the Fed has raised its benchmark rate six times since March, and its past four hikes have each been by a hefty three-quarters of a point. The central bank is hoping to engineer the difficult task of bringing inflation down to its 2% annual target without causing a recession in the process.

On Wednesday, Fed Chair Jerome Powell said in a speech that the central bank could slow its rate hikes to a half-point increase when it next meets in two weeks — a message that sent cheers through the financial markets. Yet at the same time, Powell made clear that the policymakers intend to keep their key rate, which affects many consumer and business loans, at a high level for a prolonged period.

The Fed’s series of aggressive rate increases have made borrowing costs sharply more expensive across the economy. The housing market, in particular, has been hammered by a doubling of mortgage rates from a year ago: Sales of previously occupied homes have dropped for nine straight months. Many economists expect the United States to fall into a recession next year as the effects of those costlier loan rates take root.

Yet in the meantime, the overall economy is showing signs of surprising durability. On Wednesday, the government estimated that the economy grew at a solid 2.9% annual rate from July through September. The job market, the most important barometer of economic health, remains robust. Employers have added a healthy average of 407,000 jobs a month so far this year, and unemployment remains near a half-century low.

Applications for jobless benefits decline last week

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The number of Americans applying for unemployment benefits came back down last week, hovering near levels suggesting the U.S. labor market has been largely unaffected by the Federal Reserve’s aggressive interest rate hikes.

Applications for jobless aid fell to 225,000 for the week ending Nov. 26, a decline of 16,000 from the previous week’s 241,000, the Labor Department reported Thursday. The four-week moving average of claims, which evens out week-to-week swings, inched up by 1,750 to 227,000.

Applications for unemployment benefits are a proxy for layoffs, and viewed with other employment data, shows that American workers are enjoying extraordinary job security at the moment, despite an economy with some glaring weaknesses.

In spite of persistent inflation and rapidly rising interest rates, U.S. employers added 261,000 jobs last month and are creating an average of nearly 407,000 a month this year. That pace would make 2022 the second-best year for hiring — after 2021 — in government records going back to 1940. There are nearly two job openings for every unemployed American. The unemployment rate is 3.7%, a couple of ticks above a half-century low.

The government issues its November jobs report on Friday.

New weekly applications for unemployment benefits have been extremely low early this year — staying below 200,000 for much of February, March and April. They began to tick up in late spring and hit 261,000 in mid-July before trending lower again.

The Labor Department said Thursday that 1.61 million people were receiving jobless aid the week that ended Nov. 19, up 57,000 from the week before.

The tech and real estate sectors have been outliers in an otherwise robust employment market, with Facebook, Twitter, Amazon, DoorDash, Redfin and Compass all announcing significant layoffs in recent months.

Amazon won't stop selling antisemitic film

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Amazon CEO Andy Jassy said Wednesday the company does not have plans to stop selling the antisemitic film that gained notoriety recently after Brooklyn Nets guard Kyrie Irving tweeted out an Amazon link to it.

Pressure has been mounting on Amazon to discontinue sale of the film, called “Hebrews to Negroes: Wake Up Black America,” since Irving shared the link to the documentary with his millions of Twitter followers in October. The synopsis on Amazon says the film “uncovers the true identity of the Children of Israel.”

At The New York Times’ Deal-Book Summit in New York City, Jassy said it is difficult for the company to determine what content crosses the line to where Amazon doesn’t make it available to customers.

“As a retailer of content to hundreds of millions of customers with a lot of different viewpoints, we have to allow access to those viewpoints, even if they are objectionable — objectionable and they differ from our particular viewpoints,” the Times quoted Jassy as saying.

He said making decisions about what content to take down is “more straightforward” in some cases, such as when it “actively incites or promotes violence, or teaches people to do things like pedophilia.”

Dozens of celebrities, public figures as well as Jewish organizations and the Nets have called on the company to take down the film or add a disclaimer offering an explanation as to why the documentary and related book are problematic.

Amazon told the newspaper last month that it would look into adding a disclaimer on the documentary’s main page. But that hasn’t happened.

The Seattle-based company did not reply to request for comment sent by The Associated Press last month on whether it would add a disclaimer or not. Jassy, who is Jewish, said Wednesday that Amazon has employees that flag content, but scaling that more broadly could be challenging.

“The reality is that we have very expansive customer reviews,” he said. “For books with a lot of attention — especially public attention — customers do a good job monitoring other people.”

Irving was suspended by the Nets on Nov. 3 after he refused to issue the apology that NBA Commissioner Adam Silver sought for posting the link to the film. He returned after issuing an apology more than two weeks later. He missed eight games.

AG: Penalize doctor who spoke of Ohio 10-year-old’s abortion

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana’s Republican attorney general on Wednesday asked the state medical licensing board to discipline an Indianapolis doctor who has spoken publicly about providing an abortion to a 10-year-old rape victim who traveled from Ohio after its more-restrictive abortion law took effect.

The complaint alleges Dr. Caitlin Bernard violated state law by not reporting the girl’s child abuse to Indiana authorities and violated patient privacy laws by telling a newspaper reporter about the girl’s treatment.

That account sparked a national political uproar in the weeks after the U.S. Supreme Court overturned Roe v. Wade in June, with some news outlets and Republican politicians falsely suggesting Bernard fabricated the story and President Joe Biden nearly shouting his outrage over the case during a White House event.

Bernard and her lawyers maintain the girl’s abuse had already been reported to Ohio police and child protective services officials before the doctor ever saw the child. A 27-year-old man has been charged in Columbus, Ohio, with raping the girl.

Bernard’s lawyers argue Indiana Attorney General Todd Rokita, who is stridently anti-abortion, has been spreading false or misleading information about the doctor with his investigation allegations for several months.

The attorney general’s complaint asked the licensing board to impose “appropriate disciplinary action” but doesn’t specify a requested penalty. State licensing boards ensure physicians have the appropriate training and education to practice in the state and can suspend, revoke or place on probation a doctor’s license.

“Dr. Bernard violated the law, her patient’s trust, and the standards for the medical profession when she disclosed her patient’s abuse, medical issues, and medical treatment to a reporter at an abortion rights rally to further her political agenda,” the office said in a statement. “Simply concealing the patient’s name falls far short of her legal and ethical duties here.”

White House press secretary Karine Jean-Pierre on Wednesday condemned Rokita’s request.

“This is not about the concerns of the victim,” she said. “This is not about the victim at all. This is an elected official going after a doctor for helping a child who was raped and seeking health care.”

KAILUA-KONA, Hawaii — The world’s largest volcano oozed rivers of glowing lava Wednesday, drawing thousands of awestruck viewers who jammed a Hawaii highway that could soon be covered by the flow.

Mauna Loa awoke from its 38-year slumber Sunday, causing volcanic ash and debris to drift down from the sky. A main highway linking towns on the east and west coasts of the Big Island became an impromptu viewing point, with thousands of cars jamming the highway near Volcanoes National Park.

Anne Andersen left her overnight shift as a nurse to see the spectacle Wednesday, afraid that the road would soon be closed.

“It’s Mother Nature showing us her face,” she said, as the volcano belched gas on the horizon. “It’s pretty exciting.”

Gordon Brown, a visitor from Loomis, Calif., could see the bright orange lava from the bedroom of his rental house. So he headed out for a close-up view with his wife.

“We just wanted ... to come see this as close as we could get. And it is so bright, it just blows my mind,” Brown said.

The lava was tumbling slowly down the slope and was about 6 miles from the highway known as Saddle Road. It was not clear when, or if, it would cover the road, which runs through old lava flows.

LAPD seeks Reddit search warrant over leaked city council remarks

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Police have sought a search warrant for the Reddit website as they try to identify the person who leaked a racist discussion between Los Angeles City Council members and a powerful labor leader, causing a scandal that has rocked the community and shaken faith in its lawmakers.

The LAPD is trying to determine the origin of the recording that appeared on the site in October, according to a Tuesday statement.

“The investigation involves interviews of persons present and any potential witnesses that have insight into this investigation. A search warrant request has been initiated to Reddit in order to identify the person responsible for posting the recording,” said the statement.

There was no immediate information on whether the request had been granted or other details of the ongoing investigation, Officer J. Chaves, an LAPD spokesperson, said Wednesday.

An email to Reddit seeking comment wasn’t immediately returned.

Police Chief Michel Moore announced last month that detectives were investigating whether the recording made last year was made illegally.

The previously unknown recording was of a 2021 private meeting involving then-council president Nury Martinez and Councilmen Kevin de León and Gil Cedillo, as well as Ron Hererra, head of the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor.

The people at the discussion, all Latino Democrats, were captured on the recording scheming to protect their political clout in the redrawing of council districts during an hourlong, closed-door meeting that was laced with bigoted comments.

China eases virus measures amid protests

Associated Press

BEIJING — More Chinese cities eased anti-virus restrictions and police patrolled their streets Thursday as the government tried to defuse public anger over some of the world's most stringent COVID measures and head off more protests.

Following weekend demonstrations at which some crowds made the politically explosive demand that leader Xi Jinping resign, the streets of major cities have been quiet in the face of a crackdown that has been largely out of sight.

Guangzhou in the south, Shijiazhuang in the north, Chengdu in the southwest and other major cities announced they were easing testing requirements and controls on movement. In some areas, markets and bus service reopened. A newspaper reported Beijing, the capital, has begun allowing some people with the virus to isolate at home, avoiding crowded quarantine centers that have prompted complaints. The government didn't immediately respond to a request for confirmation.

But many of the rules that brought people into the streets of Shanghai, Beijing and at least six other cities remain in force. The death of former leader Jiang Zemin this week could provide another opportunity for crowds to gather and potentially protest.

The announcements easing restrictions didn't mention last weekend's protests of the human cost of anti-virus measures that confine millions of people to their homes. But the timing and publicity suggested Xi's government was trying to mollify public anger.

While experts say Beijing's policies are unsustainable, they warn it can't relax controls that keep most travelers out of China until tens of millions of older people are vaccinated. They say that means "zero COVID" might stay in place for as much as another year.

Taliban ban broadcasts from Voice of America

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Voice of America said Wednesday that Taliban authorities have banned FM radio broadcasts from VOA and Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty in Afghanistan, starting Thursday.

VOA said Taliban authorities cited "complaints they have received about programming content" without providing specifics.

VOA and RFE are funded by the U.S. government, though they claim editorial independence.

The Taliban overran Afghanistan in August 2021 as American and NATO forces were in the final weeks of their pullout from the country after 20 years of war.

Despite initially promising a more moderate rule, they have restricted rights and freedoms and widely implemented their harsh interpretation of Islamic law, or Sharia.

The advocacy group Reporters Without Borders said recently that Afghanistan has lost 40% of its media outlets and 60% of its journalists since the Taliban takeover.

Suspicious package found at US Embassy in Spain

Associated Press

MADRID — Police in Spain detonated a suspicious envelope discovered at the U.S. Embassy in Madrid, Spanish officials said Thursday, a day after a similar package sent to the Ukrainian Embassy ignited upon opening and injured an employee.

"We can confirm a suspicious package was received at the U.S. Embassy in Madrid, and are aware of reports of other packages sent to other locations throughout Spain," the American embassy said in a response to an Associated Press inquiry.

"We are grateful to Spanish law enforcement for their assistance with this matter," it added.

Authorities cordoned off a wide area around the embassy, located in the center of Spain's capital.

The action followed police reporting that multiple explosive letters were sent in Spain over the past two days. Police said they were delivered to Spain's Defense Ministry, a European Union satellite center located at the Torrejón de Ardoz air base outside Madrid and to an arms factory in northeastern Spain that makes grenades sent to Ukraine.

Spanish authorities have yet to determine who was responsible for the letters or link them to the war in Ukraine.

Authorities said a bomb squad also destroyed an explosive device that was dispatched by regular post to Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez on Nov. 24.

The Russian Embassy in Madrid on Thursday condemned the letter bombs, saying in a tweet that "any threat or terrorist attack, especially those directed at diplomatic missions, are totally condemnable."

The package sent to the Ukrainian Embassy was addressed to the country's ambassador to Spain. The employee handling it was slightly injured when it burst into flames.

Spain's National Court is investigating the incident as a terrorist act.

Ukrainian Foreign Minister Dmytro Kuleba ordered stepped-up security at all of Ukraine's foreign embassies abroad and asked his Spanish counterpart for a fast investigation.

What it's like to live with brain fog

COVID spotlighting the condition, a form of cognitive dysfunction

BY LINDSEY BEVER
The Washington Post

Haze. Slow. Drunk. Lost. These are the words some people use to describe “brain fog.”

The condition, a form of cognitive dysfunction, has been plaguing people with certain chronic illnesses for years. But now, a new wave of people with long-COVID-19 are experiencing it, casting a spotlight on the often debilitating condition.

“It’s a moment where the public and the medical community are realizing that this is real. This is what happens after certain infections,” said Akiko Iwasaki, a professor of immunobiology at Yale University and a co-author of a review article on COVID-19-related cognitive impairment.

“I think it’s their time to be recognized,” she said.

Research shows a majority of people experiencing long-COVID have reported brain fog — a collection of symptoms, including impaired attention, concentration, memory and processing speed. Iwasaki and Michelle Monje, a professor of neurology at Stanford University, examined more than 100 studies relevant to cognitive dysfunction after COVID-19.

They outlined six potential causes for COVID-19-related cognitive dysfunction and concluded that a likely common cause is lung inflammation that causes inflammation in the brain and, subsequently, the dysfunction of neural cells.

Patients who have experienced brain fog, caused by a wide range of conditions, say the effects can be life-altering and devastating. They say it keeps them from many activities such as driving, biking and public speaking. Some have had to alter their work schedules or stop working entirely. And nearly all of them say it has forced them to rely on a notebook — keeping to-do lists that include the most basic tasks such as remembering to eat.

Depending on the underlying cause, there are treatments for brain fog ranging from exercise protocols to cognitive rehabilitation, but there is no method proven to work for all patients.

Dennis Kolson, a neurologist at the Penn Neuro COVID Clinic at the University of Pennsylvania, said that since the clinic opened last year, physicians have evaluated about 350 long-COVID patients for complaints, including brain fog. He said people uniformly appreciated having the chance to talk with a physician who understands their symptoms.

“Am I like the others? Are you seeing people like me? I get that question every time,” Kolson said. “I say, nearly always, ‘Yes. You’re not alone.’”

Edwin Hall, a 65-year-old Navy veteran from Fulton, Mo., spent 12 days during the summer of 2021 in a medically induced coma because of COVID-19, breathing with help from a ventilator. Doctors also discovered signs of a probable stroke, though they did not know its timing, he said.

Even now, he said, he wrestles with brain fog. He searched for words to describe it. “Lost,” he said.

He recalled an incident during a Walmart trip not long after his hospitalization that he attributes to brain fog. He and his wife went down separate aisles, and once she was out of sight, he could not remember whether she told him where she was going or think about how to handle it. “I went into a major panic attack then and there,” he said, adding that he clung to a pillar and waited for his wife to find him.

Angela Hernandez, 36

Earlier this year, he said, his symptoms forced him to retire as the application systems manager for the Missouri Department of Elementary and Secondary Education.

the dogs,’ ‘get the mail,’ ‘do the laundry,’ ‘do the dishes,’” he said.

He’s now working with a cognitive therapist, which isn’t covered by insurance, to try to deal with his impairment.

Brain fog also can affect people with myalgic encephalomyelitis (also known as chronic fatigue syndrome), fibromyalgia, postural orthostatic tachycardia syndrome (POTS), Lyme disease and depression, experts say.

Patients who have undergone chemotherapy also report brain fog, which is often described as “chemo brain.”

The severity and duration vary but the symptoms can have “an adverse effect on occupational, familial and social lives and can result in diminished quality of life,” said Jeffrey Wefel, a professor and chief of neuropsychology at the University of Texas MD Anderson Cancer Center.

Angela Hernandez, 36, of Houston, said she fought through months of brain fog starting in 2018 after four rounds of chemotherapy for ovarian cancer.

“You know when you dream and then you wake up and you can almost remember what you were dreaming about, but then as the seconds pass, the dream gets further and further away?” she said. “That’s kind of what it felt like all the time.”

For Kelsey Botti, it started with a concussion from a snowboarding accident in 2012. Later, Botti, a 32-year-old physical therapist from Pittsburgh, was diagnosed with POTS, a syndrome often characterized by a fast heart rate, low blood pressure, and oftentimes dizziness, lightheadedness and fainting upon standing — and in some cases, brain fog.

“I wanted to cry because I was so thankful that someone was helping me, and I had a diagnosis and a direction,” she said. “And then I also wanted to cry because the person that I was, was completely gone.”

Botti underwent months of treatment that included medication and a controlled exercise program to build her tolerance. And though there were bumps and emergency room visits along the way, she said that her symptoms have improved.

One challenge in treating brain fog is that patients can appear healthy, but feel terrible, said Robert Wilson, a neurologist with Cleveland Clinic’s Neurological Institute.

“If they don’t find the right medical team to understand them, they will pull away from health care and access health care less, so there are less opportunities for them,” he said.

A barrier to effectively care for patients with brain fog is the stigma attached to it, said Jacqueline Becker, a neuropsychologist in the Mount Sinai Health System in New York City who has studied cognitive impairment after COVID-19.

“The stigma prevents people from getting adequate care where physicians tend to write them off and say, ‘No, you’re young. Don’t worry about it. You’ll get better.’ Or, ‘Look, your brain scan came back as normal. There’s nothing wrong with you,’” she said. “And on the other side of that, you have a patient who is really struggling to function.”

Rachael Grossman, 22, from Chagrin Falls, Ohio, said she started developing symptoms of brain fog after a bout of whooping cough when she was 17. “I was bounced back and forth to so many different physicians, told it was in my head, told it was anxiety,” she said.

Two years later, in 2019, she was diagnosed with POTS. Grossman is now a neuroscience major at Baldwin Wallace University in Berea, Ohio, and works part time as a medical scribe. She said she has to find ways to try to overcome her “haze.”

On bad days, she said she can spend hours studying for a test without retaining a word, struggle to perform at the level she wants to at work, or feel uncomfortable driving because she worries that she may zone out.

“It will continue to affect me, sadly, but it’s just figuring out ways to get around it,” she said.

BOOKS

Bob Dylan shares his ‘Philosophy’

New book about songwriting is fascinating, amusing, unexpected

BY JON BREAM
Star Tribune

Bob Dylan has thrown us another curveball. Surprise! Surprise!

His just-published third book, “The Philosophy of Modern Song,” promised to offer Dylan’s insights into the nature of popular music. Actually, the breezy book reads more like a late-night, old-school, once-hipster DJ riffing on dozens of songs you may or may not know.

The Nobel Prize winner for literature (for his songs, not his prose) has given us a 338-page, photo-heavy hodgepodge that is part criticism, part social commentary, part pulp fiction, part comedy, part rebaked Wikipedia and, indeed, part philosophy. It’s informative, sometimes fascinating, occasionally insightful, generally entertaining and, of course, totally Dylanesque.

In the book, contemporary music’s greatest songwriter offers his take on 66 tunes, ranging from Stephen Foster’s not-exactly-modern “Nelly Was a Lady” (1849) to Warren Zevon’s “Dirty Life and Times” (2003). Dylan tackles pieces by big names like Little Richard, Ray Charles, the Who, the Clash and Cher, as well as standards and blues, bluegrass and country numbers.

Dylan’s short essays sometimes read like pulpy two-page movie treatments inspired by the lyrics. But that is probably not what readers expect from this book.

The Hall of Famer riffing in prose is often as appealing — and enigmatic — as his riffing in music.

Commenting on the Eagles’ “Witchy Woman,” he warns whoever encounters her: “Let me tell you brother, better watch yourself. You were once a diamond in the rough, had a clear conscience and clean hands — now you’re a self-admiring unchivalrous worthless fellow with an evil nature — the scum of the earth, and she’s had it up to here with you. What are the odds you’ll survive?”

Oftentimes the Minnesota icon offers background on the artist, sometimes relevant and sometimes not, gleaned by his researchers. (This feels like what he did with his “Theme Time Radio Hour” program on SiriusXM from 2006-09.) For example, in a chapter on Ricky Nelson’s “Poor Little Fool” (1958), Dylan mentions various songs about fools and then talks about Nelson’s showbiz background in TV but never really discusses “Poor Little Fool.”

Occasionally Dylan gets distractingly off-key, such as when he turns a discussion of “Mack the Knife,” the Brecht-Weill song made into a smash by Bobby Darin in 1959, into a declaration on the greatness of Frank Sinatra, whom he says “just about invented the Roman Catholic Church” while Darin was an altar boy. Or when Dylan’s discourse on “Viva Las Vegas” becomes all about Elvis Presley’s conniving manager, Colonel Tom Parker, instead of the song.

Sometimes, though, Dylan actually analyzes a tune or the recorded version of it. For instance, he explains that Johnny Cash’s “Big River” (1957) is a takeoff on Woody Guthrie’s “The Biggest Thing That Man Has Ever Done,” and the key element to Cash’s ditty is “the chain-gang thump of the acoustic rhythm guitar.”

In his critique of “Blue Moon” (the Rodgers & Hart piece recorded by Dean Martin in 1964), the bard observes “the simplicity of the lyrics makes it universal with enough detail to rescue it from being generic.”

Dylan, a noted borrower of melodies from folk and blues, offers lists of pop songs based on classical melodies, including “Can’t Help Falling in Love,” and songs with English lyrics based on foreign melodies, including “Beyond the Sea.”

In his randomly arranged, freewheeling book, Dylan makes all kinds of curious observations:

- “Volare” (1958) could have been the first hallucinogenic song.
- “Ball of Confusion” (1970) was “one of the few non-embarrassing songs of social awareness.”
- Hank Williams can sing anything and make the song his own. Willie Nelson would be “the only one who could be considered even in the same neighborhood.”
- Jerry Garcia plays guitar “like Charlie Christian and Doc Watson at the same time.”
- Putting melodies to diaries doesn’t guarantee a heart-felt song.

- Few songs made during the video age went on to become standards “because we are locked into someone else’s messaging of the lyrics.”
- “Like any other piece of art, songs are not seeking to be understood.”
- “Bluegrass is the other side of heavy metal. Both are musical forms steeped in tradition. They are two forms of music that visually and audibly have not changed in decades.”

As a critic, he is mostly polite toward the artists but takes a few shots like positing that Elvis Costello’s “Pump It Up” (1978) exhausted people. “Too many thoughts, way too wordy,” writes Dylan, who has often been accused of being too wordy himself.

The Jokerman isn’t above cracking wise. After gushing that Roy Orbison’s “Blue Bayou” (1963) is a spectacular song and record, Dylan points out that when former Minnesota Twins announcer Herb Carneal saw a fastball that “blew by you” for a called strike, he declared, “Thank you, Roy Orbison.”

There’s philosophizing here, though not necessarily about a particular song. Dylan uses the chapter on Edwin Starr’s “War” (1970) as an opportunity to preach about war in what’s his longest soliloquy in the book.

Dylan turns his chapter on Elvis Presley’s “Money Honey” (1956) into a treatise on money and wealth, concluding: “Money don’t matter. Nor do the things it can buy. Because no matter how many chairs you have, you only have one ass.”

Throughout the book, the master wordsmith pens some indelible lines.

Discussing the traditional tune “Jesse James” (1928), he proclaims: “Criminals can wear badges, army uniforms or even sit in the House of Representatives.”

Writing about Johnnie Taylor’s “Cheaper to Keep Her” (1973), he opines: “Marriage without kids is two ‘friends with benefits and insurance coverage.’”

Waxing on Carl Perkins’ “Blue Suede Shoes” (1956), he predicts: “Carl wrote this song, but if Elvis [Presley] was alive today, he’d be the one to have a deal with Nike.”

“The Philosophy of Modern Song” is not the long-promised sequel to 2004’s “Chronicles: Volume One,” Dylan’s formidable but not comprehensive, scattershot memoir. (His first book was the prose poem “Tarantula,” published in 1971.) And this new effort is not likely to lead to any distinguished literature awards. But it could take Dylan back to the top of the charts — the bestselling book lists, that is.

Tom Petty doesn't back down in 1997 Fillmore shows

Collection culls highlights from legendary residency 25 years ago

BY SCOTT BAUER
Associated Press

Listening to “Live at the Fillmore (1997),” it’s easy to see why Tom Petty said at the time he thought it was a career high point.

This archival release pulls highlights from the final six shows of Petty and the Heartbreakers’ 20-show residency at the San Francisco venue 25 years ago. It serves as a live tour, of sorts, through rock history, with a heavy emphasis on the influences that shaped Petty’s musical DNA.

Anyone expecting a rundown of Petty’s top 40 hits should look elsewhere. Some of his most loved songs are here, of course, most notably a 10-minute jammed-out version of “Mary Jane’s Last Dance.” But this set is more about Petty and the Heartbreakers going farther afield from what made them famous.

Petty cuts a wide swath, covering songs by collaborator and friend Bob Dylan, the Rolling Stones, the Kinks, Chuck Berry, Bill Withers, the Grateful Dead and more. On the expanded edition, spread over four CDs or six LPs, 35 of the 58 tracks are covers.

There is also a two-CD set with 33 songs, 18 of which are covers.

Blues legend John Lee Hooker and Roger McGuinn, founder of the Byrds, a seminal influence on Petty and his early sound, also make guest appearances.

It’s easy to hear the joy in Petty’s voice both in the songs and in the breezy on-stage banter, most hilariously his announcement that the show was live on the internet: “Whatever that is.”

Notable gift ideas that won't fall flat

By MARK KENNEDY
Associated Press

Music is never out of fashion as a gift idea. Here are some outstanding vinyl box sets for lovers of Neil Young, Billie Holiday and Ella Fitzgerald, Iron Maiden and a certain former Beatle, a book about the beginning of rock at Sun Records and another about The Byrds, tough-looking boots made in collaboration with The Clash, and even a perfume inspired by Whitney Houston.

Always young: Neil Young is releasing his 1972 album "Harvest" as a 50th anniversary edition. Young's fourth solo album remains one of his most beloved, with the songs "Heart of Gold" and "Old Man." The box sets on vinyl and CD boast the original album, three studio outtakes and an unreleased live 1971 BBC solo performance on CD, LP and DVD. Also included is the film "Harvest Time," a previously unseen two-hour documentary capturing the "Harvest" recording sessions. The package also contains a hardbound book and fold-out poster. Cost: $150.

Boots made for walkin': The Clash and Dr. Martens — two British icons — have gotten together again for some punk-approved footwear. An eight-eye, high-shine boot ($180) has a military green base, and a three-eye shoe ($140) has a cherry red base. The heels are marked with The Clash's logo, and each pair comes with a set of dog tags based on those worn by the band, and seven sets of laces inspired by the colors of their most iconic albums. Here's a way to "Rock the Casbah" in style.

Baby rock: You can't talk about the birth of rock 'n' roll without talking about Sun Records, which recorded Elvis Presley, Roy Orbison, Jerry Lee Lewis, Carl It's written by Peter Guralnick and Colin Escott, and has entries for such hits as "Blue Suede Shoes," "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On," "Breathless," "I Walk the Line," "Mystery Train" and "Good Rockin' Tonight." Cost: $60.

Sir Paul: Paul McCartney's three solo albums have been packaged into a single box. His first, "McCartney," was released in 1970 and features "Every Night," "Junk" and "Maybe I'm Amazed." "McCartney II" came out in 1980 and contained "Coming Up," "Waterfalls" and "Temporary Secretary." The third, in 2020, had tracks "Find My Way" and "Women and Wives." The vinyl versions come in creamy white or black, and there is a three-CD set. They include three photo prints with notes from McCartney about each album. Cost: $40-100.

Smell like Whitney: Whitney Houston's estate has released a perfume inspired by the singer's "luminous" personality, warmth and zest for life. Simply named "Whitney," the scent features notes of pear and citrus, balanced by gardenia, ylang-ylang and jasmine. A touch of amber grounds the fragrance with a warm, sensual note, according to its maker. The bottle was similarly inspired, taking its tall, sleek silhouette from Houston's "elegant stature." Cost: $9.95 for a 3 ml sample.

metal kings have released a three-disc vinyl rerelease. That was the album that first featured Bruce Dickinson on vocals and catapulted the band to international stardom, with songs like "Run To the Hills" and "Murders In the Rue Morgue." In the set, the band is also offering for the first time on vinyl their live concert from March 1982 at Hammersmith Odeon in London, "Beast Over Hammersmith." Cost: $49.50.

Byrds, part one: "The Byrds: 1964-1967" is a 400-page coffee-table photo book that was curated by the band's three surviving founding members. It is available in three versions, signed by the surviving members, Chris Hillman, Roger McGuinn and David Crosby. The book features more than 500 images from legendary photographers such as Henry Diltz, Barry Feinstein, Curt Gunther, Jim Marshall, Linda McCartney, Tom Gundelfinger O'Neal and Guy Webster, as well as restored images from the Columbia Records archives. Cost: $125-$1,700.

Birds, part two: Fans of our feathered friends may love a massive, 20-LP set containing 242 recordings of original songs and readings inspired by or incorporating birdsong — all to benefit the National Audubon Society. Some of the artists included in The Birdsong Project are Mark Ronson, Beck, Karen O, Nick Cave, Elvis Costello, Robert Pattinson, Jonathen Franzen, The Flaming Lips, Bobby Cannavale, Greta Gerwig and Ad-Rock. There's also a 60-page book with essays from Randall Poster and Shearwater's Jonathan Meiburg, and 27 artists contributed original paintings and illustrations. Cost: $400-$440 depending on outlet.

Top of the charts: Who has the best album in the land? Rolling Stone magazine has waded into this ongoing fraught and contentious debate with "The 500 Greatest Albums of All Time." This is a book that will spark a thousand arguments — is "Superfly" by Curtis Mayfield better than "Red" by Taylor Swift, and is Pearl Jam's "Ten" correctly ranked above "The Bends" by Radiohead?

The magazine got its ranking by polling critics and musicians like Stevie Nicks, Questlove and Beyoncé. Let the debates begin (likely as soon as this gift is unwrapped). Cost: $50.

Pokémon, Bayonetta 3 show Nintendo platform’s diversity of exclusive titles

BY SAMUEL WEINSTEIN
Stars and Stripes

With the console wars heating up, it is worth wondering where Nintendo’s Switch stands.
 As PlayStation and Xbox duke it out over Call of Duty, Nintendo has been publishing platform exclusive after platform exclusive — ranging from family friendly to mature.
 But how do these games hold up?

Pokémon

With decades of Pokémon experience, I was prepared to once again catch them all. But since I wanted to write a timely review. I decided to catch some, level up a few and beat the story-line quickly.
 The story begins with your character attending his first day of school.
 You’re then introduced to three different Pokémon: a fire type; a water type; a grass type. I went with the fire type crocodile, Fuecoco. (A strong choice for players, since he will be a dual-type Pokémon by the final evolution.)
 After picking your Pokémon, you are introduced to Arven, a character whose request will send you on a series of side missions. You then trot your way to the center of the map where the academy is conveniently located.
 Outside the campus is a bunch of bullies whom you can choose to confront. They introduce themselves as Team Star.
 After familiarizing yourself with the campus, you go back to your dorm room and sleep.
 The next morning you attend a ceremony where the director tasks the students with finding their treasure. The “treasure” will be found in three storylines.
 The first narrative is the typical path of Pokémon trainers — battling with Pokémon to become champion.
 The second is beating Team Star, but the storyline evolves into understanding why the team exists.
 The third plot is finding magical herbs with Arven, which takes you across all parts of the region.
Verdict: Pokémon Violet and Scarlet are must-have games for the Switch. They are crafted perfectly for veteran and novice players.

I appreciated that it was possible to gain experience points to level up Pokémon by having automatic battles with wild Pokémon and capturing new ones.
 The storylines themselves were as captivating as they were difficult. This means that if you hope to beat the campaign, you will have to play all storylines and capture a good deal of Pokémon to get to the endgame.
 I would recommend Pokémon to anyone with a Switch. However, if you are looking to play something a little more on the wild side, I have another suggestion for you.
Bayonetta 3
 When I think of Nintendo-exclusive games, Bayonetta is not the first franchise that comes to mind. I think of Pokémon or something else family friendly.
 Bayonetta 3 does not pretend to be that. (Although, if you want a more PG version, you can play in Naïve Angel Mode. I didn’t.)
 The game provided a vastly different experience that would change my perception of what is truly a Nintendo game.
 First, let me dive into the campaign.
 It begins with playing as an alternate version of Bayonetta.
 After button-mashing for a little while, Bayonetta is quickly defeated by the mysterious Singularity. This leads Bayonetta’s friend, Viola, to travel to an alternate universe.
 In the second universe, a second Bayonetta is introduced and quickly enters a battle against monsters dispatched by the main villain Singularity.
 Bayonetta is quickly joined by her friend Jeanne in combat to battle the monsters.
 Both Bayonetta and Jeanne retreat into Rodin’s bar. Rodin, the arms dealer from hell, then begins to explain that the monsters aren’t from supernatural Bayonetta 3 is the third title about the Umbran witch who faces another threat to humanity.

Pokémon Violet and Scarlet are must-have Switch titles, and are suitable for newbies and veterans.

plains of existence. Viola then introduces herself and explains where the monsters come from and the threat to their world posed by Singularity.
 Viola presents a solution to the second Bayonetta and Jeanne to find gears that can help defeat Singularity.
 The campaign ensues from there.
Verdict: The rest of the campaign is a hack-and-slash adventure that tests your ability to button-mash through some difficult challenges.
 As you traverse through bosses and hordes of minions, you will find that Bayonetta has unique outfit choices.
 There is a better part of a level where Bayonetta wears a revealing swimsuit while dancing on a giant spider.
 This doesn’t detract from the multiverse plot that will keep you entertained, but I wouldn’t recommend this for younger audiences if you have an issue with nudity.
 I would buy this game if you were looking to play a mature Nintendo exclusive.
 With that said, why combine two reviews into one?
 It’s because these two games demonstrate the complexity of Nintendo’s overall situation in the console war — which is waged largely between Microsoft and Sony.
 While Xbox and PlayStation owners battle over the teraflops of processing power that their respective consoles display, Nintendo is fending for itself pretty well.
 Nintendo’s vitality comes from appealing to wide audiences with memorable characters and gameplay, which these games accomplish.
 Pokémon succeeds easily with its story, familiar gameplay and constantly improving features.
 Bayonetta is truly for a unique audience and doesn’t fit the mold that Nintendo generally offers. Yet Bayonetta proudly waves its banner as a Nintendo exclusive, regardless of first appearing on Xbox and PlayStation.
 Bayonetta’s existence on the Switch shows that Nintendo is willing to go outside the realm of family-friendly games to ensure that the company appeals to a vast audience.
 Each game, though quite different, demonstrates the high quality of a Nintendo exclusive.

Debbie Gibson embraces Christmas with album, tour

By Rodney Ho
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

It's a bit shocking that pop songstress Debbie Gibson waited more than 35 years into her career to release her first holiday album, "Winterlicious."

But now that she's committed, she's going all in with a holiday tour.

"I always wanted to make a holiday album," Gibson, 52, said during a recent Zoom interview. "I'm just a big fan of timing. The universe deemed this the moment for the second act for me."

In a sense, Gibson has had far more than two acts. Besides teen pop superstar, she's been a Broadway star, a TV show judge and an actress. But her fan base loves her for her hit songs from the late 1980s including "Only In My Dreams," "Shake Your Love," "Out of the Blue" and two No. 1 ballads, "Foolish Beat" and "Lost in Your Eyes."

The Christmas show will be "cozy like those Andy Williams specials," Gibson said. "We might wear jammies doing easy, breezy versions of some of my hits and songs from the holiday album. Break out the s'mores! It's holiday time. There will also be a feeling that is super festive and, dare I say, almost theme park. Good old-fashioned musical numbers mixed in with a 'what the holiday means to everyone' vibe. These venues are smaller so we can really commune with the audience."

The holiday album, a mix of originals and covers, follows her 2021 comeback album "The Body Remembers," which contained the dance hit "Girls Night Out."

The new album includes a frothy original single "Christmas Star" she released a year ago, a duet with her dad Joe on "White

"Winterlicious" contains originals and covers.

Christmas," an original Hanukkah tune ("Illuminate") and a cover of Sammy Davis Jr.'s "Candy Man," a song she first performed in 2020 remotely on "The Talk" for a Halloween episode during the pandemic.

"Winterlicious" also includes a remastered version of "Sleigh Ride," which was on the 1992 "A Very Special Christmas 2" CD benefiting the Special Olympics.

Gibson also reunited with her buddy Joey McIntyre of New Kids on the Block. They co-wrote and recorded "Heartbreak Holiday," which she imagines could be turned into a holiday movie.

"Cheers!," the final cut on the record, is a piano-heavy homage to her mom and manager Diane, who died this year at age 76. Diane helped shepherd Gibson through the minefield of a brutal record business resistant to a teen songwriter and performer. She long preceded the likes of Lorde, Billie Eilish and Olivia Rodrigo.

Gibson is still the youngest female artist to top the Billboard Hot 100 for a song she sang, wrote and produced with "Foolish Beat" in 1988.

"Cheers!" is also "really about all of life's special but simple and profound moments and to all the baristas, artista and each stage-door Johnny," Gibson noted, quoting her own song. "My career and my life is about moments. It's great to have charting singles and awards but at the end of the day, it's about the connections we make with people."

Music, she said, brings people together. "My die-hard Debheads have been brought together through my music and inevitably by each other. They formed their own relationships outside of me. It's raising a glass to those moments and people."

Fleetwood Mac singer-songwriter, keyboardist Christine McVie dies

By Hillel Italie
Associated Press

Christine McVie, the British-born Fleetwood Mac vocalist, songwriter and keyboard player whose cool, soulful contralto helped define such classics as "You Make Loving Fun," "Everywhere" and "Don't Stop," died Wednesday at age 79.

Her death was announced on the band's social media accounts. No other details were immediately provided, but a family statement said she "passed away peacefully at hospital this morning" with family around her after a "short illness."

McVie was a steady presence and personality in a band known for its frequent lineup changes and volatile personalities — notably fellow singer-songwriters Stevie Nicks and Lindsey Buckingham.

Her death is the first among Fleetwood Mac's most famous incarnation of McVie, Nicks, Buckingham, drummer Mick Fleetwood and bassist John McVie, Christine's ex-husband. In recent years, the band had toured without Buckingham, who was kicked out in 2018 and replaced on stage by Mike Campbell and Neil Finn.

Fleetwood Mac started out as a London blues band in the 1960s, and evolved into one of the defining makers of 1970s California pop-rock, with the talents of McVie, Nicks and Buckingham anchored by the rhythm section of Fleetwood and John McVie. During its peak commercial years, from 1975-80, the band sold tens of millions of records and fascinated fans as it transformed personal battles into melodic, compelling songs. The McVies' breakup — along with the split of Nicks and Buckingham — was famously documented on the 1977 release "Rumours," among the best-selling albums of all time.

Fleetwood Mac was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1998, when at the ceremony they played McVie's "Say You Love Me." The group's many other hit singles included Nicks' "Dreams," Buckingham's "Go Your Own Way" and McVie's Christine McVie, who composed some of Fleetwood Mac's greatest songs, died Wednesday at 79. No cause was given.

"Little Lies." One of McVie's most beloved works, the thoughtful ballad "Songbird," was a showcase for her in concert and covered by Willie Nelson, among others.

The midtempo rocker "Don't Stop," inspired by the end of her marriage, would gain unexpected political relevance when Bill Clinton adopted the song — and its "Don't stop thinking about tomorrow" refrain — as a theme to his 1992 presidential run. The band, which had essentially stopped making albums at the time, reunited to perform at his inauguration gala.

Other news

■ The Rolling Stones plan to release what they're calling their "ultimate live greatest hits album," featuring multiple guest stars, on Feb. 10. The 24-track "GRRR Live!" contains songs recorded Dec. 15, 2012, at the Prudential Center in Newark, N.J. The show included guest appearances by The Black Keys ("Who Do You Love?"), Gary Clark Jr. and John Mayer ("Going Down"), Lady Gaga ("Gimme Shelter"), Mick Taylor ("Midnight Rambler") and hometown hero Bruce Springsteen ("Tumbling Dice"). Shown on pay-per-view in 2012, the concert has not otherwise been available to fans until now.

■ A new production of "The Wiz" is heading out on a national tour next fall before following the yellow brick road to Broadway in 2024. "The Wiz" opened on Broadway in 1975 and won seven Tonys, including best musical. A 1978 movie version starred Diana Ross, Lena Horne and Richard Pryor. Michael Jackson co-starred as the Scarecrow, with Nipsey Russell as the Tin Man and Ted Ross as the Lion.

Officials alarmed by rap video recorded in prison

MI LENOX TOWNSHIP — A rap video titled “In Dis Cell” appears to be too authentic: It was made inside a Michigan prison, despite a ban on wireless phones.

Two prisoners in the video have been placed in segregation at the Macomb prison in suburban Detroit, Corrections Department spokesman Chris Gautz said Tuesday.

The video, posted on YouTube, shows the men, the inside of their cell and prison staff in a corridor. The men appear to have two phones.

Gautz told the Detroit Free Press it’s “incredibly dangerous” to have wireless phones inside a prison “especially with the capability of getting onto the internet.” He said they could be used to arrange escapes or harass crime witnesses. Smuggling phones, cameras or drugs into prison is a crime.

New unit probes 23 deaths involving police

MD ANNAPOLIS — A unit in the Maryland attorney general’s office investigated 23 fatalities involving police in its first year and so far none of the investigations have resulted in officers being charged, the office said Tuesday.

The unit completed reports on 13 cases in the first year, according to the report. In that time, local prosecutors have made decisions not to prosecute in 11 cases. While the law empowers the Independent Investigations Division to probe the cases and provide facts to local prosecutors, prosecutors decide whether to bring charges.

The unit was created last year by the Maryland General Assembly to “investigate all alleged or potential police-involved deaths of civilians” throughout the state. It was part of a package of police reform laws approved after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis and the nationwide protests that followed.

GA ATLANTA — The parents of a Georgia high school basketball player who collapsed while practicing outdoors in sweltering heat and later died announced Tuesday that they have agreed to a $10 million settlement with the school district.

As part of the settlement, the Clayton County school system agreed to rename the gymnasium at Elite Scholars Academy for Imani Bell, who was a 16-year-old junior at the school when she died.

Imani collapsed on Aug. 13, 2019, after running up the football stadium steps during required conditioning drills for the girls’ basketball team, her family said in the wrongful death lawsuit filed

Imani died later that day from heat-related cardiac arrest and kidney failure, the lawsuit said. An autopsy done by the Georgia Bureau of Investigation found that she had no preexisting conditions and her death was due solely to heatstroke caused by strenuous physical exertion in extreme temperatures, the family’s lawyers said.

Counties’ federal disaster declaration is approved

WV CHARLESTON — President Joe Biden has approved a federal disaster declaration for two southern West Virginia counties hit by severe storms over the summer.

The White House announced the president’s approval Tuesday for federal assistance for communities hit by storms in McDowell County on July 12 and 13, and in Fayette County on Aug. 14 and 15. Heavy rains damaged homes, bridges and roads in both counties.

Naturopath who sold fake vaccine cards sentenced

CA SAN FRANCISCO — A naturopathic doctor who sold fake COVID-19 immunization treatments and fraudulent vaccination cards during the height of the coronavirus pandemic was sentenced in California on Tuesday to nearly three years in prison, federal prosecutors said.

Juli A. Mazi pleaded guilty last April in federal court in San Francisco to one count of wire fraud and one count of false statements related to health care matters.

The case is the first federal criminal fraud prosecution related to fraudulent Centers for Disease Control and Prevention vaccination cards for COVID-19, according to the U.S. Department of Justice. In August, U.S. District Judge Charles R. Breyer denied Mazi’s motion to withdraw her plea agreement after she challenged the laws that led to her prosecution.

Mazi, who fired her attorneys and represented herself, last week filed a letter with the court claiming sovereign immunity. Mazi said that as a Native American she is “immune to legal action.”

She provided fake CDC vaccination cards for COVID-19 to at least 200 people with instructions on how to complete the cards to make them look like they had received a Moderna vaccine, federal prosecutors said. She also sold homeopathic pellets she fraudulently claimed would provide “lifelong immunity to COVID-19.”

Man, 76, pleads guilty to lewd behavior on flight

MA BOSTON — A 76-year-old man accused of performing lewd acts and touching a 21-year-old woman’s leg without her consent on a Boston-bound flight earlier this year has pleaded guilty, federal prosecutors said.

The Bonita Springs, Fla., man faces up to 90 days in prison at sentencing scheduled for March in Boston federal court, according to a statement Tuesday from the U.S. attorney’s office in Massachusetts.

The man and the victim were on a flight from Newark, N.J., to Boston on April 8 when the defendant exposed himself, inappropriately touched himself and later on just before landing put his hand on the thigh of the 21-year-old woman seated next to him, prosecutors said.

The woman recorded a 24-second video and alerted a nearby passenger, authorities said.

Coroner renews push to ID remains found at farm

IN NOBLESVILLE — An Indiana coroner’s office is asking relatives of young men who vanished between the mid-1980s and the mid-1990s to submit DNA samples in a renewed effort to identify human remains found on land once owned by a man suspected in a string of killings, the scope of which remain unclear.

More than 10,000 human bones and bone fragments were discovered starting in the mid-1990s at Fox Hollow Farm, an 18-acre estate in Westfield, a city that’s a few miles north of Indianapolis, said Jeff Jellison, Hamilton County’s chief deputy coroner and coroner-elect.

The land’s then-owner, businessman Herbert Baumeister, was 49 when he killed himself in Canada in July 1996 as investigators sought to question him about the remains.

Investigators believed Baumeister, a married father of three who frequented gay bars, lured men to his home and killed them. By 1999, authorities had linked him to the disappearance of at least 16 men.

Jellison said investigators believe the 10,000 charred bones and fragments found at Baumeister’s property could represent the remains of at least 25 people.

State extends gas tax holiday, free bus fares

CT HARTFORD — Connecticut Gov. Ned Lamont signed legislation Tuesday that extends Connecticut’s 25-cent-per-gallon gas tax holiday for another month. The tax break will then be reduced incrementally over the following five months.

Lamont signed the bill into law after it cleared the General Assembly during Monday’s special session by wide bipartisan margins. It also increases funding for the state’s essential worker pandemic pay program after so many people applied. However, it also limited who can receive the top benefit of $1,000 to those earning less than $50,000.

The legislation also extends free public bus fares through March 30 and adds $30 million in federal pandemic relief funds to the state’s energy assistance program.

OPINION

Jury delivered truth: Jan. 6 was seditious conspiracy

By HARRY LITMAN
Los Angeles Times

The conviction of Oath Keepers leaders Stewart Rhodes and Kelly Meggs on charges of seditious conspiracy is a historic legal victory for the Department of Justice, but it is much more than that as well.

Tuesday’s verdicts in federal court in Washington will go a long way toward defining the Jan. 6, 2021, Capitol melee, once and for all, as a heinous, purposeful crime orchestrated by enemies of democracy.

The Justice Department richly deserves a victory lap for its efforts. Seditious conspiracy is a notoriously difficult charge to prove — the last successful prosecution was in 1995 — and it has a checkered history in the department.

In fact, it was only after contentious internal debate that the department greenlighted the charges in Jan. 6 cases as righteous and winnable.

Even so, only Rhodes and Meggs were convicted on the sedition count. All five of the defendants were found guilty of obstructing a government proceeding, but none was convicted on all the various charges the government brought.

For some observers, the mix of verdicts tempers the government’s victory. That’s the wrong way to look at it.

The prosecutors’ focus was always first on convicting Rhodes, and to a lesser degree Meggs, of seditious conspiracy.

On all the other counts and with the other defendants, the jury’s meticulous evaluation of the various charges — accepting some, rejecting others — only bolsters the credibility of their decisions. The lack of a clean sweep shows that the jurors exercised independent judgment; they didn’t simply swallow the government’s case whole. And all the defendants were convicted of serious charges carrying the potential for significant jail time.

Tuesday’s decisions will have immediate, practical legal ramifications. First, those still to be tried for their involvement in the Jan. 6 riot, including Proud Boys and additional Oath Keepers, may want to think hard about pleading guilty and offering to cooperate with the government investigation.

The verdicts also cast a shadow over anyone who consorted with the conspirators in the days after the 2020 election. Perhaps the most obvious example: Roger Stone, whose encrypted messages with Rhodes were a key part of the evidence at trial. (Rhodes messaged Stone right after Joe Biden’s victory: “What’s the plan? We need to roll ASAP.”)

More generally, the convictions represent a major advance in the Department of Justice’s pursuit of accountability for all those involved in efforts to prevent a peaceful transfer of power. Now more than ever, the department is all in on treating the riot as the existential danger it was.

That means a no-stone-unturned approach to the role of political officials in the scandal, and in particular to the investigations that are now in the hands of special counsel Jack Smith, which mainly involve Donald Trump and his circle.

The practical and legal effects of the landmark result are only a fraction of the import of the convictions.

Some of the country’s most prominent political leaders continue to embrace a ludicrous narrative that minimizes the events of Jan. 6. In their twisted telling, the riot was a legitimate political protest that got a little out of hand or even, in the words of Trump himself, represented courageous acts of patriots who have been treated unfairly by the Justice Department. The same denial of reality underlies the announced resolve of the new Republican majority in the House to investigate the Jan. 6 committee, as if that body has been engaged in an illegitimate examination of political trivialities.

Tuesday’s verdicts offer a decisive rebuttal to these preposterous accounts and one that is far more effective than the protestations of political opponents, law professors or op-ed columnists, however well reasoned.

A jury trial represents our system’s ideal of authoritative fact-finding, a process enshrined in the Constitution for getting as close as a society can to the truth of a matter that is in dispute. And the jury in this trial plainly took its duty seriously and exercised its power with meticulous attention to detail.

That doesn’t mean that the whole country will agree to call Jan. 6 a criminal conspiracy, but the holdouts are suddenly swimming against a stronger current.

The effect of these guilty verdicts, in a trial conducted with thoroughness and care, will be to marginalize the apologists for Jan. 6. They can’t help but look more and more like wingnuts or monsters now, inveighing against what a critical mass of society has accepted and denying a jury’s account that squares with what the whole country saw in real time.

That goes for history as well. The Oath Keepers convictions (and the other sedition prosecutions) will be among the rare trials — perhaps one or two a generation — to appear in high school history books. And what future students will learn is that the trials mattered deeply because they vindicated the truth about Jan. 6, 2021.

Craft therapy can smooth the road back from a concussion

By JOE MCCLAIN
Special to Stars and Stripes

The recent injuries suffered by NFL players Matthew Stafford, Joe Mixon, Tua Tagovailoa and Cameron Brate have refocused our attention on concussions. The national conversation about concussion protocols, recovery time, and the long-term consequences of concussions is once again at the forefront of people’s minds.

While the current conversation stemmed from incidents on a professional sports field, concussions are not just a sports phenomenon. Concussions occur every day, in every community, and often with perilous consequences either immediately or in the long term. According to 2020 data from the National Center for Health Statistics, about 7% of all children have had concussions. Among 12- to 17-year-olds, about 12% have had concussions. Among adults, 29% report having had a concussion. Within the Department of Defense, the Traumatic Brain Injury Center of Excellence reports that more than 458,000 service members have sustained a traumatic brain injury worldwide since the year 2000, with more than 82% being classified as mild TBI.

A concussion is a mild TBI caused by a bump, blow or jolt to the head. This sudden movement can cause the brain to bounce or twist in the skull or cause chemical changes in the brain, disrupting the brain’s normal function. And while concussions are referred to as mild TBIs, they can be debilitating. This is the brain we are talking about after all.

“Mild” or not, the list of symptoms caused by concussions is lengthy. People experience a range of physical, emotional and psychological symptoms, including headaches, nausea, dizziness, sensitivity to light, feeling sluggish or confused — and the list goes on. Walking through your daily life with any of these symptoms can be uncomfortable, even frightening, but imagine trying to focus on school or on the job with these symptoms on your mind. And while the list of symptoms is long, the list of treatments is not.

Recovering from a concussion sounds simple. Doctors usually say it takes time and rest, with care to avoid re-injury. But patients do not have to be passive participants in their recovery from concussion. There are therapies that engage people recovering from concussive injury in their own healing and allow them to mark their progress.

Craft therapy is an effective activity for concussion patients. It is a proven and effective component of occupational therapy that addresses cognitive, neurological and sensory motor skills by using crafts to focus the brain on cognitive performance and manual skills. Engaging in craft activities has been shown to help cognitive, neurological, and sensory-motor needs by targeting performance skills. It has also been shown to help promote the use of right- and left-brain function and help maintain cognitive functioning. All of these benefits can be useful when someone is attempting to recover from a concussion.

For the past 50 years, the nonprofit organization Help Heal Veterans (I’m its CEO) has been using craft therapy to help military service members address the visible and invisible wounds of war, including concussions and their lingering effects. The therapeutic craft kits Heal Vets provides have helped injured service members and veterans recover their motor and cognitive functioning and develop a more positive outlook. In a recent survey of veterans, three out of four said they found the use of craft kits as a form of therapy helpful.

The National Intrepid Center of Excellence has developed a model integrative arts program to assist military personnel who are challenged by concussion or mild TBIs. It focuses on reducing psychological, social, physical and cognitive impairments by reducing anxiety, decreasing isolation, and increasing eye-hand coordination and dexterity. Craft therapy can help with organizational skills, problem-solving and memory in cases where the frontal lobe has been affected by TBI.

Concussions do not discriminate, and with millions of people — young, old, military, non-military, athlete, nonathlete — sustaining TBIs each year, doesn’t it make sense to incorporate any accessible and effective therapy available? Craft therapy meets all these criteria and has proven its value over decades.

While the NFL continues to grapple with repeated concussions, it’s a good time to remind people of the value of craft therapy in the healing journey.

Joe McClain, a retired U.S. Navy captain, is CEO of Help Heal Veterans, a nonprofit organization dedicated to helping injured veterans and active duty military through use of craft therapy.

Baseball Hall of Famer Gaylord Perry dies at 84

GAFFNEY, S.C. — Baseball Hall of Famer and two-time Cy Young Award winner Gaylord Perry, a master of the spitball who wrote a book about using the pitch, died Thursday. He was 84.

Perry died at his home in Gaffney at about 5 a.m. Thursday of natural causes, Cherokee County Coroner Dennis Fowler said. He did not provide additional details.

The native of Williamston, N.C., made history as the first player to win the Cy Young in both leagues, with Cleveland in 1972 and San Diego in 1978 just after turning 40.

Perry, who pitched for eight major-league teams from 1962 until 1983, was a five-time All-Star who was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1991.

He had a career record of 314-255, finished with 3,554 strikeouts and used a pitching style where he doctored baseballs or made batters believe he was doctoring them.

College Football Playoff expands in 2024 season

The College Football Playoff announced Thursday it will expand to a 12-team event starting in 2024, completing an 18-month process that was fraught with delays and disagreements.

The announcement comes a day after the Rose Bowl agreed to amend its contract for the 2024 and 2025 seasons, which was the last hurdle CFP officials needed cleared to triple the size of what is now a four-team format.

The first round of the new playoff in 2024 will take place the week ending Saturday, Dec. 21. Exact dates are still to be determined.

NBA making plans for in-season tournament

The NBA is planning for the inaugural version of its in-season tournament — should it become reality — to begin early next season, according to a memo sent to teams Wednesday.

If the tournament is approved, 80 regular-season games for each team would be announced in August, with two more games set to be scheduled depending on which eight teams make the tournament's knockout stage. Those games would be added in-season to the schedule.

NBA Commissioner Adam Silver has pushed for the past several years for the in-season event to be added. Talks have gone on about it since at least 2016, and in 2019 the league even created a proposal in which teams would play eight divisional games in the group stage, followed by quarterfinals for the top eight clubs and then semifinals and finals at a neutral site in December.

AROUND THE NBA

Early NBA MVP race has crowded candidate field

BY PAT GRAHAM
Associated Press
 DENVER — Nikola Jokic may just be putting together his best season.
 It still may not be enough to get the Denver Nuggets’ big man a third straight NBA MVP.
 Chalk that up to MVP fatigue. Or to the glaringly good numbers of a crowded field of early candidates, including Luka Doncic, Giannis Antetokounmpo, Jayson Tatum and Stephen Curry.
 Jokic isn’t having to shoulder as much of the load with the return this season of fellow Nuggets stars Jamal Murray and Michael Porter Jr. He’s also taken his unselfish play to another level, which may not do him any favors in the MVP race, but it sure does help the Nuggets.
 That’s just fine with coach Michael Malone. He’ll gladly take this version of the player nicknamed “Joker,” the one averaging a career-best 8.8 assists to go with 23 points and 9.8 rebounds through the first quarter of the season.
 “I don’t worry about the MVP buzz,” said Malone, whose team moved to 13-7 after a 129-113 win over Houston on Monday night where Jokic had 32 points, 12 rebounds and eight assists. “If we continue to win, Nikola is going to be in the MVP conversation because of the fact that he impacts the game on so many different levels.”
 Last season, Jokic put up 27.1 points, 13.8 rebounds and 7.9 assists because that was the best way for Denver to win. The Nuggets didn’t have Murray (knee) and barely had Porter (back).
 These days, Jokic lets the game dictate which stat category he dominates. Sometimes, it’s through his pinpoint passes. Others, with his deft shooting touch.
 To illustrate: He took nine shots and had 14 asists in a win at Oklahoma City on Nov. 3. Twenty days later, and back at Oklahoma City, he erupted for 39 points in another win.
 Jokic is trying to join the company of Larry Bird, Wilt Chamberlain and Bill Russell as players who’ve each won the MVP award in three straight seasons. But Jokic is well down the odds list of early favorites.

 Antetokounmpo and Doncic are both the favorites at +280, according to FanDuel Sportsbook. Behind Tatum, Curry, Joel Embiid, Donovan Mitchell, Ja Morant and tied with Kevin Durant, is Jokic (+2700).
 Nuggets point guard Ish Smith, who’s crossed paths with former league MVPs Russell Westbrook and Durant during his 13-team excursion, has a theory of why Jokic is not a front-runner.
 “People like to see something different. He’s a two-time MVP, so obviously people are advocating for Luka, he’s playing at a high level. Giannis, too,” Smith said. “Sometimes people like the new ‘It,’ the new thing.”
 Much like Jokic last season, Doncic needs to produce in a big way for the Mavericks to succeed. He is averaging 33.1 points, 8.7 rebounds and 8.4 assists.
 Antetokounmpo, a two-time MVP winner, is on pace for his highest scoring average (30.9). Curry, another two-time winner, continues to shoot lights out from everywhere — 52.2% from the floor, 44.1% from three-point range and 91.1% from the free-throw line. Then there’s Tatum, who’s averaging more than 30 points a game as his Celtics have won a league-best 17 games.
 The Nuggets don’t mind the throwback play of Jokic, who has the most triple-doubles of any center in NBA history.
 “He’s such a dominant force,” Smith said. “He’s pretty special.”
 Unassuming, too. Smith caught a glimpse of that when a few of the Nuggets attended a Los Angeles Dodgers-Padres game while in San Diego for training camp. There was Jokic, just walking around like any ordinary baseball fan.
 That’s just his personality. Don’t forget: He accepted the MVP trophy last season from his horse stable in Sombor, Serbia.
 “He’s not flashy. I love it,” Smith said of Jokic, the second-round pick in the 2014 draft. “I don’t think I’ve ever been around a superstar like that.”

Brutal slate for Gonzaga goes on with No. 6 Baylor

Associated Press
 Gonzaga coach Mark Few always builds an ambitious nonconference schedule, helping not only harden his team for March but also to balance the Bulldogs’ weaker West Coast Conference slate when it comes to the NCAA selection committee.
 They’ve taken their lumps already this season, losing to second-ranked Texas and fifth-ranked Purdue to fall out of the top 10 for the first time since February 2018. But the No. 14 Bulldogs also have marquee wins over No. 19 Kentucky and No. 20 Michigan State, the latter played on the USS Abraham Lincoln at North Island Naval Air Station in California.
 Next up in the meatgrinder: No. 6 Baylor on Friday night at the Sanford Pentagon in Sioux Falls, S.D.
 Oh, and it just happens to be a rematch of the 2021 national title game won by the Bears in a rout.
 “Every time I see Baylor playing,” Bulldogs guard Julian Strawther said, “I just kind of think to that national championship game. For sure excited to get out there and play against a great team on a neutral site. Those are the games that all great players want: two top teams, a bunch of great players. I’m super excited for it.”
 It’s not as if the Bears, who face Marquette on Tuesday night, will have had an easy road to South Dakota, either. They lost to third-ranked Virginia in Las Vegas before knocking off No. 21 UCLA in the Continental Tire Main Event.
 “(Baylor) is one of the most amazing stories in sports, from where it was — how low it could be, which is apathy plus all the stuff that happened there,” said Few, who has grown close to Bears coach Scott Drew over the years.
 “He’s just such a positive person and force and that’s what his program is like,” Few said. “They really got, not a system but they recruit to what works at Baylor. Their perimeter players in the national championship game were terrific, the ones they have now are terrific. They have size inside. They’ve really got that thing going.”

Kansas City Chiefs tight end Travis Kelce celebrates a touchdown with quarterback Patrick Mahomes (15) and JuJu Smith-Schuster against the Los Angeles Rams on Sunday in Kansas City, Mo.

Chiefs’ Mahomes turns to Bengals after son’s birth

By DAVE SKRETTA
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Chiefs quarterback Patrick Mahomes showed up bright-eyed and energetic for practice on Wednesday.

Perhaps the adrenaline was still flowing from the birth of his baby boy.

Or his wife was handling all the late-night diaper changes.

“Brittany is a champ,” said Mahomes, who along with his wife welcomed Patrick “Bronze” Mahomes III on Monday night, and gave 1-year-old daughter Sterling a little brother. “Everything went great and everything went smooth.”

Mahomes said the addition to the family — his father, Pat Mahomes Sr., and many other family members happened to be in town for the birth — won’t affect his preparation for one of the marquee games on the Chiefs’ remaining schedule.

They’re headed to Cincinnati on Sunday for a rematch of the AFC championship game, when Kansas City jumped out to a 21-3 lead and still led 21-10 at halftime before its offense collapsed and the Bengals rallied for a 27-24 victory.

It’s a game that has stuck with everyone in the Chiefs locker room for the past 11 months.

“I think you have to keep it in perspective. It’s a brand-new season,” Mahomes said. “But any time a team beats you before, you want to beat them, especially when they beat you in a game like they did to go to the Super Bowl.”

Mahomes acknowledged that his play went downhill in the second half that night, his fundamentals going awry as the lead shrank and the pressure mounted.

It’s something he worked on throughout the offseason, and weekly during the season, and those finely tuned fundamentals have put him in the conversation for a second MVP award.

He leads the league in passing by a wide margin — Mahomes has thrown for 3,585 yards while the Bills’ Josh Allen is next with 3,183. Ditto for touchdowns with Mahomes throwing 29 to Allen’s 23. He’s throwing for more yards per game (325.9) than any point in his career, his yards-per-attempt is the highest in three years, and Mahomes is completing better than two-thirds of his throws for a third consecutive season, all despite an injury-riddled wide receiver group.

It helps that Travis Kelce is having a similar stupendous season. The three-time All-Pro tight end already has 12 touchdown receptions, which is tied with the entire rosters of the Browns, Texans and Rams and more than seven other teams.

“A quarterback like him, he’s a special guy, man. Those don’t come around very often,” Chiefs wide receiver JuJu Smith-Schuster said. “You look at Tom Brady — Tom played with how many receivers? And you can’t name them all? Same thing with Pat, man. He threw to 10 different guys (last week against the Rams) and was just making plays.”

Smith-Schuster has missed time with a concussion and was out of practice Wednesday with an illness. Mecole Hardman is on injured reserve with an abdominal injury and Kadarius Toney is still out with a hamstring issue.

Yet with Mahomes under center, the Chiefs offense keeps on humming. It has eclipsed 400 yards seven times this season, and five straight, which is tied for the longest streak in franchise history.

“He stays pretty focused on the task at hand,” said Chiefs coach Andy Reid, when asked whether the arrival of Bronze this week has caused any wrinkles in their preparation for Cincinnati.

“He has a great wife that takes care of a lot of that,” Reid said. “Bronze, man, I love it. Patrick Mahomes III. I think Bronze is in good hands. The players all got on Patrick: ‘If he plays long enough, we’ll have another quarterback here.’”

Titans rookie doesn’t listen to comparisons between him, Brown

By TERESA M. WALKER
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Treylon Burks has been compared to former Titans wide receiver A.J. Brown from the moment Tennessee drafted him using the selection gained in the trade that sent Brown to Philadelphia.

It’s a heavier topic of conversation as the Titans (7-4) prepare to visit Brown and the Eagles (10-1) on Sunday.

For Burks, it’s simply not an issue.

“I just don’t listen to it,” Burks said Wednesday.

The 6-foot-3, 225-pound Burks will likely be compared to Brown for the rest of their careers, tied together by the stunning draft night trade in April that sent a Pro Bowl wide receiver to Philadelphia for draft picks including the 18th selection overall.

Tennessee immediately used that on Burks, an All-Southeastern Conference wide receiver out of Arkansas as a junior. Right now, there’s no comparison in production for either this season or for both receivers’ first NFL seasons.

Brown, the 51st pick overall out of Mississippi in 2019, posted a 100-yard receiving game in his NFL debut. He finished with 52 catches for 1,051 yards and eight touchdowns starting 11 of 16 games.

Burks has started three games, sidelined for four with a stint on injured reserve. He currently has 24 catches for 334 yards and just scored his first NFL touchdown recovering Derrick Henry’s fumble in the end zone of last week’s loss to Cincinnati.

“I’m Trey, he’s A.J.,” Burks said. “I play my game. He plays his game.”

Brown currently ranks ninth in the NFL with 831 yards receiving on 53 catches and has seven TDs. No Titans wide receiver has more than 400 yards receiving on an offense that currently ranks 29th in the NFL averaging a mere 175.9 yards per game.

Burks has a chance to join Brown in one category if he can catch at least four passes for 70 yards receiving Sunday. Brown is the only other receiver to do that in three straight games for Tennessee, and he did it in his lone Pro Bowl season of 2020-21.

Burks was compared to Brown frequently before the NFL Draft.

Titans coach Mike Vrabel said Wednesday that they saw a receiver in Burks they thought could run a lot of different route trees and playing all levels along with the ability and willingness to block, catch and run and adjust to the ball while running downfield. Burks flourished in training camp and early in the season.

Then an injured left toe put him on injured reserve.

Since the rookie was activated off IR, Burks has had his two best games of the season. He posted his first 100-yard receiving game on Nov. 17 in a win at Green Bay, catching seven of eight passes for 111 yards. Burks fought off a defender for a 51-yard catch and finished with four catches for 70 yards against the Bengals.

Vrabel noted the rookie’s attitude and hard work while on injured reserve to be ready when activated. The coach said Wednesday that Burks showed the ability to fix mistakes with receivers coach Rob Moore on a short week before the Titans played Green Bay on a Thursday night.

“Just think his overall attitude, I think his competitiveness is good. Just keep working,” Vrabel said.

Tennessee Titans wide receiver Treylon Burks catches a pass in front of Packers cornerback Jaire Alexander on Nov. 17 in Green Bay, Wis.

Trojan transformation: Riley's remarkable fix at USC paying off big

By GREG BEACHAM
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — When Lincoln Riley took over Southern California's four-win football program one year ago this week, the coach stood on the top rim of the Coliseum and boldly declared his Trojans should be competing for championships right away.

Riley chuckled Tuesday when he was reminded of that exhilarating time in his life after his shocking departure from Oklahoma, but he has no interest in gloating about just how right he turned out to be.

"I feel a lot right now like I did then," Riley said. "When you do sit back for a second and think about where we were a year ago, and some of the things that have transpired for this team and the program during that time, it's fun to think about. But it's just not the time and place right now."

Riley has delivered on his declaration with a swiftness that even surprises some of the players who have turned USC (11-1, 8-1 Pac-12) into the nation's fourth-ranked team with a chance at both the Pac-12 title and a College Football Playoff berth. The Trojans even won both of their biggest rivalry matchups against UCLA and Notre Dame in the past two weeks, reclaiming the Victory Bell and the Jeweled Shillelagh.

It's a stunning correction to a miserable decade-plus for the West Coast's marquee program, which has won just one conference crown since 2008 and has never played in the CFP, which began in 2014.

USC will be in Las Vegas on Friday night for the Pac-12 title game against No. 12 Utah, the only team to beat Riley's Trojans this season. One more payback victory in a year dubbed "a revenge tour" by star USC defensive end Tuli Tuipulotu would punctuate this season with an exclamation point, even if it isn't over yet.

"It is a crazy story, but I think we knew that we had to turn everything around, and we've been working ever since Lincoln Riley came in," said Tuipulotu, the FBS leader with 12½ sacks. "We knew it was going to happen if we kept working."

Riley and Heisman Trophy favorite Caleb Williams are the faces of this turnaround as two former Sooners who moved to California and immediately hit it big. But the coach and his players have all said this flashy transformation happened because of 12 months of hard work and a fierce commitment to team-building.

"From spring ball to summer workouts, I thought we were going to be a great team," said Williams, the elusive quarterback with 3,712 yards passing and a school-record 44 total touchdowns. "The outside world is going to say what they want to say, and we're 11-1 right now, so obviously it doesn't matter. We thought we were a great team, and we've shown that."

USC restocked its roster with a host of talent from the transfer portal, particularly at the offensive skill positions, but the bedrock of this hard-hitting team is the players left behind after seven modestly successful seasons under Clay Helton. That veteran core was hurt and humbled after going 4-8 last year under Helton and interim coach Donte Williams — but almost nobody left, and almost everybody improved under the guidance of Riley's staff.

"Some teams really whooped us last year and disrespected us, even in our home stadium," center Brett Neilon said. "I think that made the bond even tighter between the guys that are left here, and I think it had a trickle-down effect to some of the new guys. I feel like last year we had really good talent, and we were just getting beat. Coming back here this year, we're making the wrongs right."

ATHENS, Ga. — A healthy Kenny McIntosh and strong play from the offensive line have No. 1 Georgia's running game peaking just in time for the postseason.

The Bulldogs ran for more than 200 yards in each of their last two regular-season games, providing valuable momentum for Saturday's Southeastern Conference championship game against No. 11 LSU in Atlanta.

The Tigers' run defense will try to recover after giving up Devon Achane's career-high 215 yards and two touchdowns in last week's 38-23 loss to Texas A&M.

Georgia (12-0) led Georgia Tech only 10-7 at halftime last week before coach Kirby Smart called for a re-commitment to a physical running game. The Bulldogs answered the call by scoring on their first five possessions in the second half of a 37-14 win.

McIntosh and Kendall Milton ran for touchdowns as Georgia outrushed Georgia Tech 264-40. McIntosh posted game-high totals of 86 rushing yards and 91 receiving yards.

"When he flips the switch and really starts going, he's got great vision and great hands," said Smart of McIntosh. "He's a weapon."

After dealing with two deep thigh bruises this season, McIntosh looks strong for the postseason. That's a good sign for Georgia's hopes of defending its national championship.

"It's my last year and I know what I want and I've been waiting all my life for this moment," McIntosh said after the Georgia Tech game. "I want to take full advantage of this opportunity."

Daijun Edwards, Milton and Branson Robinson shared the carries with McIntosh. The Bulldogs averaged 6.5 yards per carry against Georgia Tech, boosted by a 45-yard run by McIntosh and a 44-yard gain by Milton.

LSU linebacker Micah Baskerville said he expects Georgia to challenge the Tigers' run defense, especially after last week's poor showing.

"They have a good offensive line, good size," Baskerville said. "I see that they're physical. Our goal is to stop the run. We feel they're going to come out and run it on us because of last week. That's our challenge that we're going to have to stop so it doesn't happen back-to-back weeks."

Georgia ran for 247 yards while passing for only 116 yards in a 16-6 win at Kentucky on Nov. 19.

Smart credits "the physicality at the line of scrimmage" for the late-season surge in the running game.

"I think the line of scrimmage is playing really well, they're playing really physical," Smart said.

Georgia has completed back-to-back undefeated regular seasons. The Bulldogs will try to snap a streak of three straight SEC championship game losses. They lost last year's SEC title game to Alabama before winning the rematch in the national championship game.

Depth at running back and an efficient passing game provided balance to the offense. Stetson Bennett threw two touchdown passes on only 135 yards against Georgia Tech.

Georgia ranks No. 8 in the nation with 488 yards per game in total offense, including 203 on the ground.

"Those guys have played physical," said Smart of the running backs. "The backs have done it by committee. That's been helpful."

LSU (9-3) ranks only 59th against the run, allowing 144 yards per game. Defensive end BJ Ojulari said the Tigers' run defense must recover from last week's "very disappointing" game against Texas A&M.

"We all know what the task at hand is," Ojulari said. "We're still going to have to go out to Atlanta and play our best game. We know our potential. We know how we can play and the level we can play at."

Kansas State running back Deuce Vaughn carries the ball on a touchdown run during the first half of the Wildcats' game against TCU on Oct. 22 in Fort Worth, Texas.

Big 12 title game RBs look distinct with similar results

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas — The body types are certainly different for TCU's Kendre Miller and Kansas State's 5-foot-6 dynamo Deuce Vaughn, yet the third-year running backs that will be featured in the Big 12 championship game look pretty similar in what they do on the field.

Like Vaughn, the 6-foot, 220-pound Miller can be shifty, elusive and quick. While being nearly 50 pounds lighter, Vaughn can also be hard to tackle and doesn't shy from contact whether running or blocking. That was on display last week when he bulldozed a Kansas defensive back to spring Malik Knowles for a touchdown.

Miller has rushed for 1,260 yards and 16 touchdowns, running for a score in every game this season for third-ranked TCU (12-0, 9-0 Big 12, No. 3 CFP). His 153 yards six weeks ago against Kansas State included two TDs after halftime for the Horned Frogs, who won 38-28 after overcoming an early 28-10 deficit.

"He's a physical hard runner that doesn't come down with arm tackles. We didn't wrap up well. We have to get more bodies to the ball," K-State coach Chris Klieman said. "He makes guys miss and runs through arm tackles and drags guys for another 3 yards."

No. 13 Kansas State (9-3, 7-2, No. 10 CFP) gets another shot at Miller and the playoff hopeful Frogs on Saturday, when the Wildcats play in their first Big 12 title game since upsetting then-undefeated No. 1 Oklahoma in 2003.

While Vaughn (1,295 yards) and Miller are 3-4 in the Big 12 in rushing yards, both also catch the ball out of the backfield. That has been a bigger part of K-State's offense since Will Howard took over as the primary quarterback after dual-threat Adrian Martinez got hurt on the opening series against TCU. Vaughn has 25 catches for 274 yards with all three of his receiving TDs since.

"He's a load trying to tackle him when they hand it to him, but they've done a really nice job getting him on linebackers and him running routes. They've been really creative in some of the things they've done as far as making him a receiver," TCU coach Sonny Dykes said. "So that's going to be challenging for us to try to not only stop him carrying the football, and also receiving the football."

Vaughn and Miller don't have to do it by themselves for their respective offenses, with plenty of other talented skill players around them.

Kansas State also has a bigger back in DJ Gidden, and Howard can also throw to all-around receiver Malik Knowles (46 catches, 679 yards, three TDs), who also has run for three scores. The Frogs have one of the NFL's top prospects in receiver Quentin Johnston (49 catches, 764 yards, five TDs), while senior quarterback Max Duggan leads the Big 12 with 3,070 yards and 29 TDs passing.

"It's a big deal, just having other people to lean on. Our offense is a pretty high-power offense," Miller said. "Just having dudes like Q and Max who can make plans any time, it's a really big deal, because as a defense game planning, it's pretty hard to scheme for us because you don't know who's going to make big plays."

Sainristil's switch to CB at Michigan proves to be wise

By Larry Lage
Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Mike Sainristil, whose family fled Haiti when he was an infant and raised him in suburban Boston, wanted to have the ball in his hands to make plays at receiver when he chose to attend Michigan.

Sainristil got his wish, scoring touchdowns in each of his first three seasons and emerging as a dependable player on offense last season when the Wolverines won their first Big Ten title since 2004.

Jim Harbaugh asked Sainristil last spring to switch to cornerback and it has proved to be a win-win move.

"The way this year is going, I can make plays on defense, too," Sainristil said.

The second-ranked Wolverines (12-0, 9-0 Big Ten) will likely line up Sainristil at times against stand-out receiver Charlie Jones on Saturday night when they face Purdue (8-4, 6-3) in the conference championship game in Indianapolis.

"New week. New mindset. New opponent," Sainristil said Monday. "It's time to hit that reset button. We're currently where we want to be, but we know that in order to get where we want to go, it starts on Saturday."

"We can't get to the playoffs, we can't win the national championship without winning the Big Ten championship."

Michigan is coming off a win over rival Ohio State on the road for the first time since 2000 to reach the conference championship game for a second straight season due to a slew of key plays.

One of Sainristil's pass breakups might have been the most pivotal play during the game on a third down from the Michigan 9.

Buckeyes tight end Cade Stover had his hands on the football in the end zone until Sainristil used his closing speed and strength to break up the pass with his left hand. That forced Ryan Day to settle for a field goal, cutting Ohio State's deficit to eight points midway through the fourth quarter.

Sainristil finished with seven tackles — one shy of his career high — and two pass breakups in the 45-23 win in the Horseshoe, where he put a Michigan flag on the block "O" at midfield.

Harbaugh said the senior is one of many players on the team that made a personal sacrifice for the good of the team.

"Easily could have been another guy, 'I'm a great receiver. I'd rather get more targets than take on the challenge of changing positions,'" Harbaugh said. "Anything for the team. Changed positions. Voted captain. He's been phenomenal and had a phenomenal game, his best game of the year."

Sainristil has been one of Michigan's most steady players on defense this season. He has 48 tackles, including 4½ for losses and two sacks, and has broken up seven passes.

Over his first three seasons, he made 36 receptions for 532 yards and five touchdowns along with occasionally returning kickoffs and punts.

Sainristil can stay in college for another season, taking advantage of the NCAA granting an extra year of eligibility for any student-athlete who endured the COVID-affected 2020-21 school year, or he can take his versatile talents to the NFL.

"As far as next year goes, I'm not sure. I haven't decided what I'm doing," he said. "I'm just still focused on what's in the present moment and that's helping Team 143 be the best it can be and Purdue on Saturday."

CHARLES REX ARBOGAST/AP
The Oilers' Connor McDavid, right, scored a goal and had an assist in Wednesday's win over the Blackhawks. He leads the NHL in points.

McDavid on familiar path to be the best

BY STEPHEN WHYNO
Associated Press

As he approached his 500th regular-season NHL game on Wednesday, Connor McDavid marveled at how Sidney Crosby has maintained a high level of play for more than twice that long.

“Just the longevity of it,” the Edmonton Oilers captain said. “You look at a guy like Sid, who I think has changed his game a little bit here and there a few times over, it’s so incredible to see.”

And familiar. McDavid is a much different player 500-plus games into his career than he was seven years ago when he made his debut. He is arguably the best player in the world after following a Crosby-like blueprint of isolating individual weaknesses and turning them into strengths.

“I’d like to think I’m a more responsible player, probably not as reckless as I was at 18 years old,” said McDavid, who will turn 26 in January. “I play the game a little bit different, but you have to adapt in the NHL otherwise you don’t go very far.”

Only five players in league history have put up more points through 500 games than McDavid’s 724 and the list does not include Crosby, Alex Ovechkin and other elite players.

He again leads the NHL in points a quarter of the way through the season with 41 in 23 games, and McDavid’s next trick could be scoring 50 goals in a season for the first time. Before training camp he said that would be nice but pale in comparison to team success.

“Numbers, really, at this point, I’ve kind of been there and done that,” McDavid said. “I’ve won my Art Rosses and Hart trophies and that stuff’s all kind of a moot point.”

McDavid has won the Art Ross Trophy as the league’s leading scorer four times and Hart as MVP twice. The furthest he and the Oilers have advanced in the the playoffs was last season, when they reached the Western Conference finals before losing to the eventual Stanley Cup-champion Colorado Avalanche.

Edmonton needs more than just McDavid and longtime running mate Leon Draisaitl to make another deep run. But if the storied franchise is going to hang a sixth Cup banner from the rafters, McDavid’s evolution will be a big reason for it.

After winning just 41.2% of his faceoffs in his rookie year, McDavid has steadily improved in the circle to the point he’s now in the top 25 players in the league in that category. He had 89 giveaways in 2018-19 and has not approached that number since. And he has become a serviceable penalty killer.

“I think there is evolving his personal game,” coach Jay Woodcroft said. “I see a 200-foot player, I see a lot of defensive details in his game and I see someone who has adapted offensively. He doesn’t just resort to doing the same thing day in and day out, year in and year out.”

All that after entering the NHL with the pressure of not only being the top pick in the 2015 draft but called hockey’s “Next One” as a generational talent expected to follow in Crosby’s skate tracks.

McDavid was immediately the face of the franchise and soon after the youngest captain in NHL history at 19 years, 266 days old. He credits now-retired winger Matt Hendricks for helping him evolve as a leader, another area of his development.

“I don’t think he gets enough credit on the leadership side of things,” Woodcroft said. “For Connor, it’s not just about setting an example, it’s also holding the team to a certain standard and holding people accountable to that standard.”

Ghana, Uruguay meet again after 2010 Cup drama

BY GERALD IMRAY
Associated Press

DOHA, Qatar — Ghana and Uruguay meet at the World Cup on Friday in a repeat of one of the tournament’s most contentious games, and Luis Suarez still isn’t apologizing for his central role in the controversy 12 years ago.

Uruguay striker Suarez’s deliberate handball on the goal line at the end of extra time in the quarterfinals of the 2010 World Cup in South Africa denied Ghana a certain goal and a place in history as the first African team to reach the semis. Suarez was sent off for the handball but celebrated wildly on the sidelines when Asamoah Gyan hit the penalty off the crossbar. Uruguay won the ensuing penalty shootout.

To make it worse, Suarez boasted after the 2010 game: “Truth is, it was worth it.”

On Thursday, he remained unrepentant.

“I don’t apologize because I take the handball and the red card but the Ghana player missed the penalty. It’s not my fault because I didn’t miss the penalty,” Suarez said.

Ghana can now go some way toward settling the score. By beating Uruguay in its final Group H match, Ghana would advance to the round of 16, while knocking Uruguay out of the tournament.

Though the match in Al Wakrah has been circled as one to watch ever since the World Cup draw was made, Ghana coach Otto Ado tried his best to cast it as a “normal game” despite 2010 remaining a raw and painful memory for many Ghanaians, who are demanding revenge for the handball.

“For me, it’s not a big topic,” Ado said, adding he wouldn’t criticize one of his own players if they did the same as Suarez. “I would expect every player to do all he can to make sure his team goes through. Even sacrificing himself with a red card.”

“What happened in 2010 is very sad but we can’t change it. We want to look forward and we want to win this game,” he said. “No matter how.”

Ghana, which squeezed out a thrilling 3-2 win over South Korea in its last game, must win again in Al Wakrah to be certain of going past the group stage for the first time since 2010. A draw could also be enough depending on the result of South Korea vs. Portugal.

Captain Andre Ayew is the only Ghana player in Qatar who was on the 2010 squad.

ing the 35-year-old Suarez, who is playing what’s likely his farewell World Cup before winding down a career that saw him celebrated as one of the best forwards in the world at one point. He won the Copa America with Uruguay and Spanish league titles and a Champions League trophy with Barcelona.

Suarez also carved out a reputation as one of the game’s most controversial characters and has been punished three times for biting opponents, including a four-month ban for biting Italy’s Giorgio Chiellini on the shoulder at the 2014 World Cup in Brazil.

Uruguay must beat Ghana and hope South Korea doesn’t beat Portugal to extend its stay at the World Cup and Suarez’s international career for at least one more game. Goal difference will decide it if Uruguay and South Korea both win.

Stoking it just a little bit more, Suarez said the 2010 game against Ghana does still mean something to Uruguay.

“We are going to put our lives and soul into this match,” Suarez said. “Ghana is a good team but we know them, we have beaten them before and we know how to beat them again.”

No pressure for Australia as Messi, Argentina await

By ANDREW DAMPF

DOHA, Qatar — Australia center forward Mitchell Duke plays in the Japanese second division. Midfielder Ajdin Hrustic of Hellas Verona — the last-placed team in Italy's Serie A — is the team's lone player based in Europe's top five leagues.

After unexpectedly surviving the World Cup group stage, the Socceroos will once again rely on teamwork, determination and self-belief when they go up against star-studded Argentina in the round of 16.

"We have no real pressure," said forward Mathew Leckie, who scored in a 1-0 win over Denmark. "We just need to enjoy the moment, enjoy the occasion. No one expects us to win. So let's shock the world."

Center back Harry Souttar, the man who will be charged with stopping Lionel Messi in Australia's next match, is the tallest outfield player at the World Cup at 6-foot-6.

He only recently returned from ACL surgery but his and the team's confidence has been building game after game while advancing from a difficult group featuring defending champion France and European Championship semifinalist Denmark.

"It's 11 against 11. There's not 11 Messis. There is one," right back Milos Degenek said Thursday. "We know their squad is full of stars. Even (Paulo) Dybala is on the bench and (Lautaro) Martinez comes off the bench. So it's a squad that's immaculate.

"I always loved Messi, and I think he's the greatest to ever play the game," Degenek added. "(But) it's not an honor to play against him, because he's just a human, as we all are."

Australia's performance has been a testament to team spirit and proving doubters wrong.

"No one believed in us apart from us and the people around us," Degenek said Thursday. "So it's phenomenal."

It's only the second time in six World Cups that Australia has reached the knockout stage. The 2006 team was beaten by eventual champion Italy in the round of 16 on a controversial stoppage-time penalty.

Australia only qualified for this tournament following a penalty shootout win over Peru in an intercontinental playoff in June. But planning for the World Cup started long before that.

Degenek left Red Star Belgrade in January for the Columbus Crew in MLS, specifically to get more playing time in view of the tournament in Qatar.

Duke, who scored with a difficult header in Australia's 1-0 win over Tunisia, once considered becoming an electrician when his soccer career stalled. Then coach Graham Arnold gave him a chance with the Central Coast Mariners and the pair are now reunited with Australia.

"Obviously I've got a lot of faith in the kid," Arnold said. "Everyone talks about where he plays but when he walks over that white line he gives 100% for the nation and the jersey."

Right back Milos Degenek celebrates Australia's 1-0 victory over Denmark that put the Socceroos in the round of 16.

Amid protests, Iran gets tepid welcome

Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Iran's national soccer team received a subdued welcome home after its World Cup defeat against the United States, a match played against the backdrop of ongoing anti-government protests in Iran. One Iranian man was shot dead celebrating the American victory.

The players returned from Qatar late Wednesday, a day after their 1-0 loss. Anti-government protesters, considering the team a symbol of Iran's clerical rulers, had celebrated the loss in some Iranian cities with fireworks and cheers.

One man was shot dead by Iranian security forces in northwest Iran for honking his car horn in support of the U.S. victory, the Oslo-based rights monitor Iran Human Rights reported on Thursday.

Iran's treatment of the players will likely be scrutinized because they refrained from singing the Islamic Republic's national anthem during their opening World Cup match. Many considered the move a show of solidarity with the protests. The team did sing the anthem in subsequent matches.

A few dozen fans greeted the national team's return at Tehran's international airport late Wednesday, with people cheering and waving the Iranian flag.

Yet the players have faced biting criticism from anti-government protesters who have blamed the team for not being more vocal about the security force's violent putdown of the demonstrations. Human rights groups say over 400 protesters have been killed in the crackdown, with thousands more arrested.

An image of players bowing in the presence of President Ebrahim Raisi before setting off to the tournament was widely criticized by activists on social media. A hardline cleric, Raisi has likened protesters to "flies" and dismissed the movement as a foreign plot, without offering any proof.

Mehran Samak, 27, was shot dead after honking his car in support of the U.S. win after Tuesday's match in the city of Bandar Anzali in northwest Iran. Oslo-based Iran Human Rights reported he was "shot in the head by state forces when he went out to celebrate the Islamic Republic's loss."

Samak is also a childhood friend of Iranian midfielder Saeed Ezatollahi, who mourned his death on his social media. But again he received criticism from activists for not explicitly stating Samak was killed by government forces.

Boost: Along with youth, Americans provide speed

"We may be the underdog," said Brenden Aaronson, who replaced Pulisic at the start of the second half. "The Dutch are a world power and they've been that for many, many tournaments. So I think for us, it's just going in there with no fear and playing the way we have been this entire tournament. And I think good things will come out of it."

Matt Turner, the first U.S. goalkeeper with consecutive World Cup shutouts since 1930, was overcome with emotion at the final whistle. Turner thought back to how the U.S. performance in 2010 helped convert him to soccer.

He was a high school baseball player who played soccer full time, then switched emphasis. Turner's journey took him to a Major League Soccer debut in 2018, a transfer to Arsenal last summer and now success on soccer's biggest stage.

"This is just an unbelievable experience for me, given my story," he said. "Almost everything is a carbon copy of the feelings that I felt as a fan in 2010. And to be able to have a say in the result that gets us through to the next round is huge — it was just very emotional for a lot of reasons for me."

The American lineup against Iran was the youngest of any team at this year's tournament and the youngest for the Americans since 1990, averaging 24 years, 321 days. Iran coach Carlos Queiroz, a former U.S. Soccer Federation adviser, praised their pace, which forced his team to adjust.

"When we play a team with Ferraris who need space to accelerate, the best way to play against them is to close the highways so they can't gain speed," he said.

A daunting task against the Dutch is ahead: The U.S. has five losses and six draws in 11 World Cup matches against European opponents since upsetting Portugal 3-2 in a 2002 opener.

"It's a great opportunity but it's not something that we're going into it thinking it's an honor. We deserve to be in the position we're in and we want to keep going," Berhalter said. "So for us, it's about how we recover from this game and prepare to play against a very good Dutch, very well coached, ton of quality all over the field, and we have to come up with an idea of how to beat them."

Reaching the final 16 with Tuesday's 1-0 win over Iran was another step for a team whose success is measured in television viewers and buzz along with final scores.
"I don't know the final numbers, but I'm sure there was a lot of people watching," U.S. coach Gregg Berhalter said. "You see how resilient this group is. You see how unified this group is. You see what
