Just think of all the things Sarge does for us.

He gets us up in the morning.

BAM!

He keeps us in shape!

Keep moving! Faster!

He helps us to lead productive lives.

Keep digging!

But have we ever thanked him?

You’re the best, Sarge!

Social distance!!

You’re great!

DOONESBURY

Can’t put my finger on it.

But something feels off here.

Disperse! Last warning!

Disperse, leftist scum!

Rascal! Red rascal!

Test who calls duty?

It’s we! We’re the people! What happened to you, man?

What do you mean?

You used to fight injustice! How you’re defending it!

I am! You’re dead.

We’re protesting. Systemic racism. Man, you should do with us.

It’s not too late, rascal. You can save your soul.

Justice!

Sick pivot, dude!

Thanks, the right side of history is a better look for me.

CANDORVILLE

I read your article called “America’s Oldest Part-time Job” and was a prime example.

Well, George Washington was a prime example.

Right away, he was portrayed as an honest man, even though he basically stole from his troops.

He tricked officials into giving him thousands of acres of land his troops had been promised as an enlistment bonus.

Americans made him out to be a military genius, but he won, and his big “crossing the Delaware” moment only succeeded because his inept opponent ignored a warning notice.

Did you know his building basically started the Seven Years’ War?

When it comes to America’s daddy, maybe just say “thank you for your service” and move on.

It was a world war that raged across five continents, and he started it.

DILBERT

By Scott Adams

The government is threatening to regulate us like a monopoly.

Are we not a monopoly?

We are simply a company that makes an essential product for modern life, and we have no real competition.

That sounds like a monopoly.

No, we are not a monopoly because other companies could compete with us if they wanted.

And if they tried?

As soon as they got some traction, we’d buy them and shut them down.

So... they would fail every time? But they could try.
